REPORT

TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE VISCOUNT PALMERSTON, M.P.,

HER MAJESTY'S PRINCIPAL SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

My Lord,

Census Office, 29*th April* 1854.

The first part of the Statistical Account of the Population of Great Britain has already been presented to Parliament; and we have now the honour to lay before you the volumes of Tables, exhibiting summaries of the other principal facts which were inquired into under the Act for taking the Census.

Territorial divisions.

The various territorial divisions of the country were explained in the First Report; where, after pointing out the many conflicting subdivisions, and stating the population of several of them, separately, we showed that the purposes of the Census would be most effectually carried out by making those districts of England and Wales which are in use under the Poor Law Acts, and the Act for the Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, the basis of the principal detailed abstracts. With the new arrangement of the returns it was said, "No change whatever has been made in the boundaries "of parishes; for the hundreds Districts have been substituted; and "the groups of complete districts, called, for the sake of distinction, "'Registration Counties,' differ little, in extent or area, from the ancient "counties with which, wherever it was practicable, their boundaries are made "conterminate."

By adhering here to one complete division of the country, confusion will be avoided, comparison will be facilitated, and the bulk of the publication will be reduced; while nearly all purposes of national interest will be served.

Manuscript Tables.

The detailed returns, and the voluminous Manuscript Tables, from which these condensed abstracts are compiled, will be preserved.

Towns, houses, families, population

Besides the territorial divisions of Great Britain, the towns, houses, families, and numbers of both sexes of the population were passed in review in the First Report; and we propose now to notice more particularly the ages of the people, their condition in respect to marriage, their occupations, and their birth-places.

Age, condition, occupation, birth-place.

§ 1. AGES OF THE PEOPLE.

Importance of the distinction of age.

A Census in which only the numbers of a people are taken is necessarily incomplete; for, in time, man differs almost as much from himself as he does from the things around him; and the changes which he undergoes are not wrought solely by external circumstances, but arise in the ordinary course of his life. How different is he in infancy, in the prime of manhood, and in decrepit age! Among uncivilized tribes the enumerations are generally confined to the "fighting men;" and the Mosaic Census, the earliest on record, numbered

" every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go " forth to war."* The discrimination of the Ages of a population is indispensable where all are enumerated, as the proportional numbers in the various stages of life differ not only in different nations, but in the same nation, as will be immediately shown, at different times.

i. Summary Views of the Ages of the Population.

Previous returns of ages.

The ages of the British population were first returned in 1821: in 1801 and 1811 " age " formed no head of inquiry. In 1821 the answers to the question of age were " purposely left optional, both as regarding the returning " officer, and the persons to whom the question was to be proposed by him." Yet the returns of ages, under this voluntary inquiry, embraced 8-ninths of the persons enumerated; and where no returns were made it was apparently the fault of the overseers, rather than of the people; for the omission was not in individual returns, but in whole parishes and townships.† In 1831 the number of males of 20 years of age and upwards was demanded; and the inquiry extended no further in this direction. In 1851 the name and age of each person were written in a schedule, either by the head of the family or by the enumerator; as indeed had been done, with a little less accuracy, in 1841.

Ages of vagrants and others unreturned.

The ages of 52,565 vagrants and others were not stated in 1841, and nearly as many ages of the same classes were, probably, omitted in 1851; but as it is necessary for the purposes of calculation to distribute the numbers proportionally over the several periods of life, it was deemed most convenient to carry out this distribution at once, by inserting their probable ages in the books, with distinctive marks to indicate the interpolation. With this qualification, the numbers, as they were returned, of males and females separately, under 5 years of age, of 5 years and under 10 years, and for each subsequent quinquennial period of life up to 100, are given in the Tables for each of the 11 divisions, the 52 counties, the 624 registration districts, the 2,190 sub-districts of England and Wales; for the two divisions, the 32 counties, and some towns of Scotland; and for the Islands in the British Seas.

Numbers under the age of 20 and of the age 20 and upwards, 1821–1831.

Mr. Rickman noticed that in 1821 and 1831 the number of males under twenty years of age and the number of twenty years of age and upwards were nearly equal; and this proportion has since been regarded as invariable, or it has been assumed that the males of the age of twenty and upwards are equal in number to a fourth part of the whole population.

Great Britain. Excess of the numbers of the age of 20 & upwards in 1851.

The Census of 1851 reveals a very different state of things; for even if the army, navy, and merchant seamen abroad are omitted, the males in Great Britain‡ of 20 years of age and upwards (5,475,540) exceed the males under twenty years of age (4,779,313) by 696,227.

The ages of the army, royal navy, and seamen are now included in the returns.

The army, navy, and merchant seamen of Great Britain, at home and abroad, were omitted in the statements of age both for 1821 and 1831, but they should evidently be included, as the subtraction creates a great and unnatural depression of the number of males in the middle periods of life. The Tables§, therefore, include these classes of men,—whose ages, as well as those of others omitted, have been estimated for the previous years from the returns of 1851; and the comparisons, at different ages, are now instituted between the whole of the male and female population. The numbers here have undergone, for general convenience in use, a further correction, to raise the population, which was never taken quite in the middle of the several Census years, to its estimated amount at that period.

Remarkable results.

The Tables display the following remarkable results :—Of the 14,422,801 people living in 1821, 6,981,068 were under 20 years of age, and 7,441,733 were 20 years of age and upwards; while of the 21,185,010 living in 1851, the numbers under 20 years of age were 9,558,114, and the numbers of the age of 20 years and upwards were 11,626,896.

Excess in 1851 of adults in the population.

The number of the population of the age of 20 and upwards in 1851 exceeds the number under the age of 20 by 2,068,782.

Relative increase of the children and of the adult population.

The increase in the young population under 20 years of age in the 30 years (1821–1851) has been 2,577,046; the increase in the adult population of 20 years of age and upwards in the same time has been 4,185,163.

Males of 20 and upwards.

The males of 20 years of age and upwards at the two periods amount to 3,587,600, and to 5,610,777; the increase in the 30 years has been, consequently, 2,023,177 men of the age of 20 years and upwards. All of these numbers, it is evident, would not be able to "go forth to war," if the population in mass were called to arms; and the quality of the population at after ages differs so much, in vitality, strength, and intelligence, that it requires a still further analysis.

Men of the age 20–40.

The males at the soldier's age of 20 to 40 amounted to 1,966,664 in 1821, and to 3,193,496 in 1851; the increase in the thirty years is equivalent in number to a vast army of more than twelve hundred thousand men (1,226,832).

Women of the age 20–40.

The women at this fruitful age of marriage (20 to 40) were then 2,119,385 in number; they have increased by 1,243,073, and now amount to 3,362,458.

Rates of increase at the age 0–20, and 20–40.

While the population under 20 years of age increased 37 per cent., the population at the second age of 20 to 40 increased 60 per cent.

At the age of riper knowledge and experience (40 to 60 years), the increase was 1,244,400 persons, or 55 per cent. in the thirty years.

60–80.

The number of persons in mature life, at the age of 60 to 80 years, increased 45 per cent.; while the increase at the extreme period of life after 80 was only 34 per cent.

80 and upwards.

Effectives, and ineffectives by reason of age, in 1821 and 1851.

If it be assumed, as it may be fairly, that the population under the age of 10 years, and the great bulk of the population of the age of 70 and upwards, are chiefly sustained by the industry of the population living in the middle periods of life, extending from the age of 20 to the age of 60, it will follow that in 1821 the 6,367,991 persons of the two middle ages sustained 4,355,166 children and old persons, or 68 per cent. of their own numbers; while in 1851 only 5,797,295 ineffectives by age (57 per cent.) were sustained by 10,082,296 of the effective population. Tested by these facts, the strength of the nation has increased faster than its numbers.

Proportional numbers of the living at five ages.

The population of 1851 is so constituted that if the century of life over which a generation may extend is divided into five periods of 20 years, commencing at the ages 0, 20, 40, 60, and 80, the numbers in 1,000 males are 461, 307, 165, 62, and 5; while the numbers in 1,000 females at the same periods are 441, 312, 168, 71, and 7. The exact proportions are shown in the Table (4), p. xvi. They are approximatively represented by 6 under 20 years of age, to 4 at the age 20–40, 2 at 40–60, and 1 at the age of 60 and upwards. The numbers at the ages 20 to 60 now somewhat exceed the numbers under the age of 20 years; and it should be borne in mind by those who have to deal with the whole population, that the persons of the age 20 to 40,—but not their possessions,—are nearly twice as numerous as the persons of the next vicenniad (40–60), and that the males of that age (20–40) exceed in number the males at all ages over 40 in the proportion of 31 to 23.

Proportions at the several ages in 1841 and 1851.

In the year 1851 the proportions at the age 20–40 in 100,000 of the population are nearly the same as in 1841; but since the latter year the proportions at the age 40–60 have increased.

Ordinary divisions of human life.

There are some natural, some useful, and some artificial divisions of human life, of which a few may be advantageously noticed, since the tabular returns have been distributed, by the method of differences, so as to exhibit very nearly the numbers living at each of the several years of age.*

Numbers under the age 25, and of 25 and upwards.

Human life is naturally enough divided into two periods; the first terminates at the age of 25, which is now the average age of marriage in England; the second period extends from that age to senility, or to the catastrophe of death. In the Roman law 25 was the age of majority, as it is in the present French code for males. The number of persons at the last Census in Great Britain under the age of 25 was 11,573,377; of the age of 25 and upwards, 9,611,633.†

Numbers of minors and of persons of age.

By the Common Law of England, all persons under the age of 21 are infants; 21 is the age of majority; and in the five following years of age half of the marriages in England are now contracted. The number of minors in Great Britain at the last Census was 9,985,133; the number of 21 years of age and upwards was 11,199,877.

Other legal ages.

Males at 14, females at 12, may consent to marry, but cannot legally marry until the age of 21, without the consent of their guardians. And the English law regards 14 as the age at which a person is competent to distinguish right and wrong; under 7, children are irresponsible; between the ages of 7 and 14 they are in some cases responsible. The number of persons of the age of 14 and upwards was 14,167,871; of 14 and under 21, the number was 2,967,994; of 7 and under 14, the number was 3,260,188.‡

Physiological ages.

Physiologists divide human life into four periods§, the embryonic, immature, reproductive, and sterile ages: the first terminating at birth; the second at puberty, which is achieved at 15; the third at 45, after which few mothers have children; and the last at 100 and upwards. The numbers in Great Britain at the three latter periods are, males under 15, 3,754,936; of 15 and under 45, 4,811,172; of 45 and upwards, 1,851,235. The number of females under 15 was 3,703,144; of 15 and under 45, 4,984,299; of 45 and upwards, 2,080,224.‖

Three ages of life.

Individual life exists on such conditions that it may at any moment cease; and the vital tenure varies not only with every change of external circumstances, but by natural laws at every year of age. It is most insecure in infancy and old age. At the age of puberty,—before the period when the growth of the body is most rapid,—before the age of its great strength,—before the age of greatest intellectual power,—it is least assailable by death. The chance of living through a given year increases from birth to the age of 14 or 15; it decreases to the age of 55–8 at a slightly accelerating rate; after which the vitality declines at a much more rapid rate.¶ The numbers living at the ages 15–55, extending to the extreme limits of the reproductive age, where the vitality wears away slowly, is 5,664,781 males, 5,903,111 females. The numbers living of the ages after 55 are 997,626 males and 1,161,412 females.

The seven ages.

Seven, which numbered the notes of music, the metals, and the planets, for the Greek philosophers, was supposed by them to measure the critical intervals of human life. The "seven ages" of Hippocrates,—which, according to one account, terminated at the years seven, fourteen, twenty-eight, thirty-five, forty-two, fifty-six, seventy or more,—were extended by Solon to the ten equal septennaries ending in the years seven, fourteen, twenty-one, twenty-eight, thirty-five, forty-two, forty-nine, fifty-six, sixty-three, seventy, or the last to which life extended; and another philosopher added the two periods up to eighty-four years, the fulness of life—beyond which he would no more reckon than would the charioteer the ground that he ran beyond the goal. Some of these septennary years coincide with striking epochs of life, and have evidently suggested our legal and some of our popular divisions for which the numbers in the population have been already given.

The Roman ages of Varro.

Varro divided life very naturally into five equal ages, terminating at the close of the years 15, 30, 45, 60, 75 or more, and proposed to call males at the five respective ages, pueri, adolescentes, juvenes, seniores, senes.*

Popular divisions of age.

The popular English divisions of life are expressed in the language by several characteristic words,—such as babe, suckling, infant, child, boy, girl, lad, lass, youth, maiden,—and young, middle-aged, old,—man, woman. These terms are not used with so much precision as they might easily acquire; and some of them, derived from different sources, are used synonymously, while the latter terms often include the period which the earlier words especially designate. But (using a little force to make them express consecutive ages) it may be said that Great Britain in 1851 contained, babes and sucklings (under 1 year), 578,743; infants (1–5 years), 2,166,456; children (5–10 years), 2,456,066; boys (10–15 years), 1,141,933; girls (10–15 years), 1,114,882; youths (15–20 years), 1,051,630; maidens (15–20 years), 1,048,404; young men (20–30 years), 1,830,588; young women (20–30 years), 1,939,906; men of middle-age (30–50 years), 2,376,904; women of middle age (30–50 years), 2,482,382.

The oldest ages attainable.

Before proceeding to consider the next age a problem presents itself for solution. What is the oldest age that is now attained? What is the measure of the complete orbit of human life? The Census furnishes some aid towards the prosecution of this inquiry, which is certainly of no inconsiderable interest or importance. In Great Britain more than half a million of the inhabitants (596,030) have passed the barrier of "threescore years and ten;" more than a hundred and twenty-nine thousand have passed the Psalmist's limit of "fourscore years," and 100,000 the years which the last of Plato's climacteric square numbers expressed (9 times 9 = 81); nearly ten thousand (9,847) have lived 90 years or more; a band of 2,038 aged pilgrims have been wandering ninety-five years and more on the unended journey; and 319 say that they have witnessed more than a hundred revolutions of the seasons.

Instances of extreme age.

Many instances are cited of men living in the ancient world more than a hundred years†; and Lord Bacon, in his History of Life and Death, quotes as a fact unquestioned that a few years before he wrote, a morris dance was performed in Herefordshire, at the May-games, by eight men, whose ages in the aggregate amounted to eight hundred years.‡ No populous village in

* Censorinus de Die Natali, cap. xiv.

† See the ages of the Patriarchs in the Bible; Cicero de Senectute; Plinii, Hist. Nat. lib. vii. 48: De spatiis vitæ longissimis.

‡ Bacon has given a long series of instances in his work: Historia Vitæ et Mortis; sive Titulus sextus in "Historia naturali et experimentali ad condendam Philosophiam:" Quæ est, Instaurationis magnæ pars tertia. Cap. Longævitas et Brevitas vitæ in homine.

England was then without a man or woman of fourscore years old. In the seventeenth century, some time after Bacon wrote, two Englishmen are reported to have died at ages greater than almost any of those which have been attained in other nations. According to documents which are printed in the Philosophical Transactions of the Royal Society, Thomas Parr lived 152 years and 9 months, Henry Jenkins 169 years. The evidence in these extraordinary instances is, however, by no means conclusive, as it evidently rests chiefly on uncertain tradition, and on the very fallible memories of illiterate old men; for there is no mention of documentary evidence in Parr's case, and the births date back to a period before the parish registers were instituted by Cromwell (1538).*

Thomas Parr and Henry Jenkins.

* Fuller, in his "Worthies" (Vol. II. page 264), gives the following account of Parr, "Thomas Parre, son of John Parre, born at Alberbury in the parish of Winnington in this county (Shropshire), lived to be above 150 years of age; verifying his anagram: Thomas Parre.

Most Rare Hap.

"He was born in the reign of King Edward the Fourth, 1483; and two months before his death was brought up by Thomas Earle of Arundel (a great lover of antiquities in all kinds) to Westminster. He slept away most of his time, and is thus charactered by an eye-witness of him:

"'From head to heel his body had all over
A quickset, thickset, nat'ral hairy cover.'"

"Change of air and diet (better in itself, but worse for him), with the trouble of many visitants, or spectators rather, are conceived to have accelerated his death, which happened at Westminster, Nov. 15, 1634; and he was buried in the Abbey Church, all present at his burial doing homage to our aged Thomas de Temporibus."

Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, examined the body of Parr in 1635, and left an account of his "Anatomy," in Latin, which was published by Dr. John Betts in his work De Ortu Sanguinis in 1668 (?) An abstract of the paper in English is printed in the 3d volume of the Philosophical Transactions, pp. 886–7. The following notes are abridged from the original paper by Harvey:—

Thomas Parr, a Shropshireman, of the village of Winnington, died 14th Nov. 1635. He had completed his 152d year and nine months. He had measured out the lives of nine princes, and the tenth year of the "present most happy reign." His body was dissected by order of the King. Of a fleshy habit of body, hairy chest, black hairs on the outer arm, thighs without hair and smooth. He married a widow in his 120th year, who gave an account of him, for which we must refer to the Philosophical Transactions.

His chest was broad and ample; his lungs, not spongy, were bound to his ribs, especially on the right side, by fibrous adhesions (fibrosis nexibus); they were distended with much blood, as is usual in peripneumonia, so that before the blood was withdrawn they seemed somewhat black, whence also I observed a lividness in the face, and a little before death orthopnœa; hence it was that long after death heat remained in his armpits and chest, with the other symptoms that are common to persons who die of suffocation.

We decided that he died of suffocation and from difficulty of breathing; but the blood being afterwards expressed and washed from the lungs, they seemed of a very white and almost milky parenchyma.

His heart was large and thick, and fibrous, with much fat about its circumference and walls (dissepimentum). The blood in the heart was blackish.

The cartilages were not bony, but flexible and soft.

His intestines were round, fleshy, strong, as also his stomach. The small intestines seemed muscular, with certain incisions like rings. Whence it happened that he fed frequently on some kind of esculent day or night, observing no rules or time of eating. He was content with rancid cheese, and all milky substances,—coarse bread, and that hard,—thin drink, frequently sourish buttermilk (sero acidulo). So sparely and hardly in his poor larder, without anxious cares, he prolonged his life. Not long before his death he ate about midnight.

* * * * * * Harvey adds:—

"His death must be referred chiefly to change of air, in which necessary of life this city is exceedingly deficient, owing to the immense concourse of men, beasts of burden, to sewers and other uncleanlinesses, and to the pollution arising from the smoke of sulphureous coals, whence the air is always heavy, especially in autumn, to a man coming from the sunny and salubrious plains of Salop, particularly an old, weak man."

Luxurious living was another cause.

His brain was large, very firm, and solid. He had been blind for twenty years; but he heard well, replied promptly to questions, and walked lightly between two crutches. His memory was impaired, so that he remembered nothing distinctly of things he had done in his youth, nor of public transactions, kings or eminent men, or the wars or disturbances of his youth, or of manners or men, or the price of commodities. He remembered only things he had done in his latest years. Up to his hundred and thirtieth year he had been employed in rustic labour, even threshing of corn."

The account of Henry Jenkins, who attained the age of 169 years, was communicated by Dr. Tancred Robinson to the Royal Society. (See Phil. Transact. v. 19. p. 266, No. 221.)

Ann Savile in a letter says: "It was told her that he had sworn as witness in a cause at York to 120 years, which the judge reproving him for, he said he was butler at that time to Lord Conyers. His name (it was reported) was found in an old register of Lord Conyers' servants. One day, being in my sister's kitchen, Henry Jenkins came in to beg. I told him he was an old man, who must suddenly expect to give an account to God, and desired him to tell me very truly how old he was. He paused a little, and then said to the best of his remembrance he was about 162 or 3. He said that he remembered Henry VIII.,—also Flowden Field. I asked whether the King was there. He said no; he was in France, and the Earl of Surrey was general. He believed he was about 10 or 12 at that time, for (says he) I was sent to Northallerton with a horse-load of arrows, but they sent a bigger boy from thence to the army with them. I looked in an old chronicle that was in the house, and did find that Flowden Field was 152

Centenarians in 1851.

At the last Census 111 men and 208 women have been returned of ages ranging from 100 to 119 years; and to the scientific inquirer in the districts where these old people reside, an opportunity is afforded of investigating and setting at rest a problem of much greater interest than some of the curious questions that engage the attention of learned societies. Two-thirds of the centenarians are women. Several of them in England are natives of parishes in Ireland or Scotland where no efficient system of registration exists; few of them reside in the parishes where they were born and have been known from youth; many of the old people are paupers, and probably illiterate;—so that it would no doubt be difficult to obtain the documentary evidence which can alone be accepted as conclusive proof of such extraordinary ages.

The occupations of the centenarians as they are returned are exhibited in the annexed Table.

years before. I found by the book that bows and arrows were then in use, and that the earl he named was then general, and that Henry VIII. was then at Tournay.

"Henry Jenkins was a poor man. Could neither write nor read. There were also 4 or 5 in the same parish that were reputed all of them to be 100 years old, or within two or three years of it; and they all said he was an elderly man ever since they knew him, for he was born in another parish, and before any register was in churches. He told me too he was butler to the Lord Conyers, and remembered the Abbot of Fountains Abbey very well, who used to drink a glass of wine with his Lord heartily, and that the dissolution of the monasteries he said he well remembered."—Ann Savile.

"Henry Jenkins died 8th Dec. 1670, at Ellerton-upon-Swale.

Flodden was fought 9th Sept. 1513, and he was 12 at that time. In the last century of his life he was a fisherman, and used to wade in the stream. Diet coarse and sour. Latterly he begged up and down. He hath sworn in Chancery and other courts to above 140 years' memory. Went on foot often to the York Assizes, and swam in the rivers after he was more than 100 years of age.

The localities in which they reside are enumerated at the foot of the next page (xiii).

Imperfect evidence of the extreme ages.

Until the system of Registration and the Census have been for many years in operation, the evidence of extreme ages must remain indecisive; but there can be now no doubt that some of the twenty-one millions of people in Great Britain have lived a century; which may therefore be considered the circuit of time in which human life goes through all the phases of its evolution.

Actual statistical divisions. The five ages.

Every year of age from birth exhibits some appreciable change, and any subdivision of age is necessarily arbitrary to some extent; but the century of life may be, for some purposes, conveniently subdivided, as it was by Wargentin in the first Swedish Census, into 20 periods of 5 years,—20 lustres; for others into 10 decenniads; and for others into 5 vicenniads,—each of 4 lustres or of 20 years. We have used the latter division of five ages largely in the Report, and shall show that it is well characterized.

First age—from birth to 20.

The first age, covering the first twenty years of life, extends over childhood, boyhood, and youth. It is the age of growth; and it is the age of learning, for the greater number, in the beginning on the mother's arms; in the middle of the period, at school; in the end, at the workshop: where, in succession, the manners, language, knowledge, and skill,—the traditional and hereditary acquisitions of mankind,—are transmitted to the new generation. The seeond age or vieenniad (20–40), of whieh thirty years is the central point, embraees the period of early manhood. Growth is eompleted; weight, stature, and strength are at their maximum. hears the name of father from the lips of his children. In bad natures and in unfavourable circumstances, it is the age of crime, of passion,—of madness, which breaks out in its wildest forms,—as well as of wasting maladies.

Third age—from 40 to 60.

In the third vicenniad (40–60), of which the middle point is fifty years, we see men in the higher professions first attain eminence; the capital which has been expended in their education returns rapidly; their established character gives them the confidence of their fellow-men; experience and practice enable them to deal as proficients with the great interests and questions of the world. They see their children enter life. The edifices, of which the foundations were laid before, spring up around them. The prudent, tried, skilful, inventive man now often becomes, in England, a master, and controls establishments in which he was once the clerk, the workman, the apprentice boy. It may be justly called the intellectual age,—the legislative, the judicial age. The statesman speaks, and his voice reverberates over an attentive nation. But the passions and labours of life wear deep furrows: the health of the workman is shaken in great cities, and he falls before their pestilences; the heart and the brain are sometimes overwrought; diseases acquire force, and the man easily falls their victim.

The fourth age—from 60 to 80.

The fourth vicenniad (60–80), of which the year seventy is the centre, may be considered the laureate age of a complete life. The veteran retires from the camp, the workman from the workshop, the labourer from the field; where they have done their duty. The age of strength is over; but as civilization advances, men are not now cast aside, but enter upon the legitimate rewards and honours of their accumulated services. The merchant has acquired riches; the manufacturer has given his name to a lasting house of business; the proprietor's improvements are visible in his lands and houses; the physician, the judge, and the bishop, discharge the highest functions of their respective professions; the fruits of the prescient statesman's wise measures ripened under opposition are now gathered in by a grateful people. Integrity and wisdom in counsel are sealed by experience, and receive the recognition which envy can no longer gainsay. The father, as well in humble as in high life, who has wisely ruled his house, receives the homage of his sons at the head of new families; the devoted mother is called by her children blessed: and upon the Sovereign who has trod the paths of duty, righteousness, and greatness, among a free people, undying glory rests. As a good life in old age becomes something almost divine, so a bad life is then transformed into a "wrinkled eld" of almost supernatural malignity; of which, the designations evil eye, wizard, witch, the "old serpent the devil," express the popular dread and abhorrence:

> "And that which should accompany old age,—
> As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,"—

the tyrant and hoary plotter of evil

> "Must not look to have; but, in their stead, > Curses, not loud, but deep."

The fifth age—from 80 to 100.

If the vitality rapidly decreases in the fourth age, the strength fails, the senses grow dull, the mind itself decays, in the fifth vicenniad (80–100): and then the colours of the world fade away; the forms of men are indistinctly seen in the dim twilight; the voices of men are heard, but like the inarticulate murmurs of the sea; the sense of being, and the memories themselves of well-spent years, are at last obliterated. The lamp of life is not broken, but is softly burnt out: Ita sensim sine sensû ætas senescit; nec subitò frangitur; sed diuturnitate extinguitur.

The last age of life.

While little more confidence should be placed in the relations of the ages of men extending to centuries than in the hopes of the alchymists who sought elixirs, this last period appears to be as much a necessary part of the perfect life, according to the Divine plan, as the age of childhood and youth. It is the period of repose after the labours, struggles, achievements, and glories of manhood are over. The grand climacteric age,—the year of abdication,—differs in every individual—as the human structure varies infinitely; but, by the nature of things, it should precede by many years the hour of dissolution; for if it is grateful to a nation to visit the places in which its great men have lived—to gaze on their monuments, and to follow their cars in pageants and processions to the tomb,—it is still more grateful to know that they are in the midst of us, and to view sometimes the lineaments that are still more intimately associated with their immortality.

The age of man a measure of time.

In the present advanced state of science it appears to be a very simple and a natural process to measure the duration of time by the revolutions of the earth round the sun; but it was otherwise in the infancy of astronomy. Among some of the early nations, the ages of generations of men were made the basis of their chronology, and served to mark the succession of time, and the order of events. The Etruscans, it is said, reckoned that the time from the birth to the death of the last of the children who were born on the day of the foundation of a city measured the first sæculum; and so in successive sæcula, which were found to vary, but to be about a hundred years, according to Varro and Livy.* The Romans made their civil sæculum 110 lunar years, and celebrated the completion of that period by the secular games, which were from policy, however, celebrated at other intervals. If the children who are born in England, not on a given day but in a year, were taken, it is nearly certain that some of them would live a hundred years; but it is probable that few of them would live more than a century; so that the limit of human life is regulated by a great physical law, which has varied little, during the lapse of two thousand years, in the climate and races of Italy and England.

Age of man, and its applications in chronology.

The Egyptians, or the Greeks†, discovered that there was an average interval of a hundred years between the births of children and the births of their great grandfathers; or that the interval in ascending a genealogical table from the birth of the son to the birth of the father was about $33\frac{1}{3}$ years. This time, called a generation, has been found to agree with modern observation; "but," says Sir Isaac Newton, who adopts the computation, "if the reckoning of generations "proceed by the eldest sons, they are shorter, so that three of them may "be reckoned at about 75 or 80 years; and the reigns of kings are still "shorter, because kings are succeeded, not only by their eldest sons, but "sometimes by their brothers; and sometimes they are slain or deposed, "and succeeded by others of an equal or greater age, especially in elective "or turbulent kingdoms." "Kings reign,"‡ he adds, "one with another, about "18 or 20 years apiece." Many of the errors of the ancient chronologies arose from the confusion, under the term "generation," of the long complete life of man with the portion of that life extending to the birth of the next generation; or with the reigning years of kings in times of violence and often of anarchy. Generations overlay each other so that a man who completes his life lives nearly $66\frac{2}{3}$ years contemporaneously with his children, $33\frac{1}{3}$ years with his grandchildren, and many years with the great grandchildren of the eldest branches of his family: his direct influence extends to the second, third, and fourth generations.

Causes of the inequalities in the numbers living at the different ages.

If the numbers of births in each year were equal, and if all men lived a hundred or any other definite number of years, the numbers that, at a Census, would be found living at each age, would be equal; so the old men would be as numerous as the young men, and as the children, in the population. The great disparity in the actual numbers living at the five ages shows conclusively that few of the people of this country have hitherto lived the natural lifetime. Thus to a hundred thousand children and young people under the age of 20 there are only 68,593 of the second age (20–40); 36,895 of the third age (40–60); 14,803 of the fourth age (60–80); and 1,355 of the fifth age.

Effects of the increase of births on the proportions living at different ages.

The whole of these differences is, however, not due to premature death, but to the gradual increase of births; and if a correction is made for this element, by reference to the English Life Table, the proportions become those in the column 3 of the subjoined Table (2).

Increase of the numbers in the first age by new generations.

Thus, if the population is expressed in hundred-thousands, and if a given number of births sustain 112 hundred-thousands alive, and we suppose them, for the sake of illustration, to be in 112 separate buildings, each containing 100,000 persons, allotted to persons of the five ages: 40 of the vast palaces will be occupied by persons under 20 years of age; 33 by persons of the second age (20–40); 25 by persons of the third age (40–60); 13 by persons of the fourth age (60–80); and 1 palace by persons of the fifth age (80–100). Besides these numbers, which are the representatives of the primary generation, 56 palaces, each containing 100,000 persons, would be filled by the new generations, in the first age (0–20); 33 by the new generations of the second age (20–40); 10 by those of the third age (40–60); and 1 by those of the new generations that had entered the fourth age. In the latter series, the second, third, and fourth and fifth in the series of houses will not be sufficiently extensive to contain the men of the first age, which will require as many new habitations, in proportion to their numbers, as those of the primary generation.

Numbers in every 100,000 born in England that enter each of the five ages.

If 100,000 children, born at the same time, are followed, and numbered at equal intervals on the journey through life, it is found that, according to the present mortality in England, 66,061 enter at the age of 20 the second of the five ages that have been characterized; that 53,824 enter at 40 the third age; that 37,998 enter at 60 the fourth age; that only 9,382 live through the four first ages, and at 80 enter the fifth age, which it is not probable that more than one or two will pass over. Consequently 33,939 never reach the second age; 46,176 never enter the third age (40–60); 62,002 never attain the fourth age (60–80); 90,618 never see the first year of the last age (80–100); and 99,998 never see the last year of the possible natural lifetime of Englishmen. Familiar friends, acquaintances, and contemporaries, every old man remembers —that he has lost nearly in these proportions, since childhood, youth, and manhood.*

The Table may be read thus:—To 100,000 males under 20 years of age living in Great Britain in 1821 there were 55,897 at the age of 20 and under 40,—31,658 at the age of 40 and under 60,—and so on.

* See Reg. Gen. 6th Rep. Life Table, pp. 560–565. 8vo. ed.

Probable lifetime. The probable lifetime of a male at birth in England is nearly 45 years; for as by that time a given number born is reduced by one-half, the chances of their attaining and of their not attaining that age are equal.

Mean lifetime abridged. The mean lifetime, or the average number of years that males live after birth, in England, is rather more than 40 years (or 40·36 years); so that if the natural lifetime is conceived to be graduated and subdivided into 100 degrees (years), only 40 of these degrees of lifetime are traversed on an average by the children of the healthiest nation of any magnitude in the world.

Mean age of the people of Great Britain. The mean age of the male population of Great Britain in 1851 is found to be 25·87 years; it was 25·49 years in 1841, and 25·13 years in 1821.

Mean age of the people of England. The mean age of the male population of England is 25·96 years; and if a correction is made, so as to give the ages of those living out of an equal number of births, the mean age is found to be 32 years.* If all who were born lived to the end of the natural age—100 years, the mean age of the living would be 50 years.

Grounds for believing that life may be prolonged. As there is no apparent reason why the mean "lifetime" in England should be 40 years; and as it is found to range in extent, under different circumstances, from 25 years in Liverpool and Manchester to 45 years in Surrey, and in other localities to a number of years still higher, there is good ground for believing that it may gradually be raised yet nearer to the complete natural lifetime. The way is not closed to great and immediate ameliorations; but as it has pleased the Author of the Universe to make the food of mankind chiefly the product of labour, their clothing of skill, their intellectual enjoyments of education, their purest emotions of art,—so health and the natural lifetime of the race are in a certain sense evidently to be the creation of the intellect and the will; and it is only with the observation, experience, science, foresight, prudence, and decision of generations of men,—at command,—that the battle of life can be fought out victoriously to the end.

Importance of the prolongation of human life. The prolongation of the life of the people must become an essential part of family, municipal, and national policy. Although it is right and glorious to incur risk, and to sacrifice life, for public objects, it has always been felt that length of days is the measure, and that the completion by the people of the full term of natural existence is the groundwork, of their felicity. For untimely death is a great evil. What is so bitter as the premature death of a wife,—a child,—a father? What dashes to the earth so many hopes, breaks so many sweet alliances, blasts so many auspicious enterprises, as the unnatural Death? The poets, as faithful interpreters of our aspirations, have always sung that in the happier ages of the world this source of tears shall be dried up.

Prospects of the extension of life in after-ages. Science, indeed, can scarcely apprehend all the results and all the modifications of society that would flow from the extension of life to its natural limit, nor perceive how all the violence, impurity, ignorance, and innumerable diseases which now destroy men can be dispersed. But science offers no justification to despair. When the great changes that have been already wrought in plants and animals of all kinds are considered,—and the infinite capacity of man, the extent to which his nature is modifiable, the probability that healthier parents will give birth to healthier offspring from generation to generation,—the mind is involuntarily disposed to listen with awakened expectations to the voice of the great prophet:—"And the voice of weeping "shall be no more heard, nor the voice of crying. There shall be no more "thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for "the child shall die a hundred years old; but the sinner being a hundred

* Reg. Gen. 12th Report, App. p. 79.

" years old shall be accursed. And they shall build houses, and inhabit " them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They " shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: " for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall " long enjoy the work of their hands."*

Youthfulness of the British population.

The population is now younger than it would be by the natural standard; but as one of the causes of the depression of age operates with more force in other countries where the mortality is greater, the people would be on an average older in Great Britain than elsewhere, were it not for the interference of the increase of births within the last hundred years, by which the proportion of children and young persons has been so much increased that it may be questioned whether the people of any country in Europe are so young as the people of England and Scotland.

The distribution of the population by age under different conditions.

The English Life Table enables us to show what the distribution of the population would have been in 1851 if the mortality had remained uniformly at the same rate, and the births had been stationary. To 100 persons at ages under 20 years the proportions at four vicennial ages, commencing at 20, 40, 60, and 80 years, would, upon this hypothesis, be 81, 63, 33, and 3; while the actual proportions are 69, 37, 15, 1.

If the births now remain invariable, and show no increase, the population will increase.

One practical consequence may be immediately deduced from this fact:— Although the births of Great Britain and the mortality remain stationary, the population will go on increasing; for the same number of births which, within the 20 years 1831–51 have produced persons under 20 years of age, will produce nearly an equal number in the next 20 years; but the survivors at the ages 20–40 will be many more than the number now living at those ages; and the numbers at each succeeding age will increase until the population ultimately amounts to forty-one times the births.

Investigation of the causes of the great change in the population from age.

The First Census of Great Britain, it will be recollected, was taken in 1801. The ages of the population were first discriminated in 1821. Only a portion of the deaths and births in England were returned, as burials and baptisms according to the rites of the Church of England, up to 1837, when the Act for the Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages came into operation. Even since that date a certain number of births has escaped registration, and the accounts of the immigration and emigration are incomplete, so that, through the want of data, the investigation of the profound change that has been wrought in the constitution and distribution of the population as to age is attended with extraordinary difficulty. The general nature of the change can, however, be satisfactorily explained.

Illustration of the effects of an increase of births on the numbers of the young and old.

Assume that a small community of 4,114 persons has been sustained for a long period by 100 annual births, and that the mortality has been such that the numbers at each year of age, from the first to the tenth, are found at a census to be 90, 83, 79, 76, 75, 74, 73, 72, 71, 71, and slowly diminish, so that there are 66 in the 21st year, 53 in the 41st year, and so on decreasing to the last age. Now, let the births from any cause suddenly increase, and instead of 100 be 200 annually, then the population will increase, and if a census is taken at the end of 20 years it will be found that the population under 20 years of age is, instead of 1,449, twice that number, or 2,898. While the numbers of the population under the age of 20 years were to the numbers of the age of 20 years and upwards at the first census as 1,449 to 2,665, the proportions at the second census will be as 2,898 to 2,665. The births remaining the same, if a third census is taken at the end of forty years the numbers under 20 years of age will be found to be still the same as at the second census (2,898); but the numbers at the age 20–40 will be doubled, and instead of 1,204 be 2,408. The proportional numbers under—and at or above 20 years of age—will be as 2,898 to 3,869. Finally, at the end of a century the population will consist of 8,228 persons, of whom 2,898 will be under 20 years of age, and 5,330 will be of the age of 20 years and upwards. The population at each age will be in the original proportions; but all the parts of which the whole number is composed will be doubled. The disturbance in the proportions of the youthful and the adult population will be greatest for some years after the increase of births commences, and will gradually disappear as the wave of population advances, unless the number of births increases every year, and maintains the population in an intermediate stage between the first state and the last change in the illustration. The Community will in successive periods contain an excess of boys; of boys and youths; of boys, youths, and young men; of persons in the first (0–20), second (20–40), and third (40–60) ages; and the general temper, strength, and intellectual state of the population will exhibit, to the eyes of the attentive observer, corresponding changes. Some such change as that here sketched has taken place in Great Britain; but the increase of births, at first gradual in the last century, has since proceeded at a rate accelerated but variable in the several classes of the population and in the different parts of the British Isles.

* Isaiah lxv. 19–22.—See Bishop Lowth's Translation, in which the reference to the longevity of men, and of their children, and children's children, in the original, is still more strikingly rendered.

The births have increased at variable rates since 1700.

Mr. Rickman, by a wise foresight, procured from the English Church Registers a long series of returns of annual baptisms, which are defective, probably, in different degrees, at different periods, but which nevertheless prove incontestably that the births have increased at variable rates during the last hundred and fifty years. These and other sources furnish data which will enable us to form a tolerably correct notion of the changes in the ages of the population.

Church baptisms and registers of births.

The number of Church baptisms in each tenth year from 1700 to 1770, and in the years 1780 to 1840, in England, as well as the number of births in the civil registers of each year, from 1841 to 1850, are shown in the First Census Report.*

The Table may be read thus:—The Population of England and Wales in the year 1851 at 30 years of age is 275,179: if the number of births had remained uniform since 1761 the numbers living at that age would have been about 133,550: and if the number of births remain the same as in 1851 without any increase in their number the population will increase; so that in 1881 the number of persons who will be found of the age 30 will be 350,548. It is here assumed that the mortality will remain the same as that indicated by the English Life Table, and that there will be neither emigration nor immigration to disturb the results.

The first two numbers in col. 4. are the same as the corresponding numbers in col. 2.; as the numbers living of the age 0–5 form the basis of the calculated series following. And the numbers in col. 3. are derived from the number of persons in the English Life Table No. 1., raised in the proportion of P_{10} to 2,216, which is the P_{90} of the graduated Table 6, p. clix of Tabular Results.

Note.—Corresponding Tables cannot be framed for Scotland, as the deaths in that part of Great Britain have not hitherto been registered in a useful form.

* See p. lxviii of present Report, and the Appendix to the First Census Report, Table 46, p. cxxxi.

Generations.

The term GENERATION is used in various senses; but it may be conveniently defined here as the whole of the co-existent persons that are sustained by a given constant number of annual births.

In a population among whom the births increase annually, new generations are annually begun, and go on developing themselves during a hundred years. For the sake of further distinction, the numbers equal to the original stock of people may be distinguished as the primary generation. The time in which a generation is completed, or the time in which it perishes—if the births cease—was called by the ancients a generation; but it would be more clearly designated by age or secule, if the word century were—as it has been shown that it is not—inapplicable.

With a few exceptions, the whole of the people living in 1851 have been born since A.D. 1751. This great generation may be conveniently subdivided into what, for the convenience of analysis, shall be called (1.) the primary generation, representing in numbers the generation existing in 1751; and (2.) parts of a hundred new generations, which have, it may be assumed, been created by the annual excess of births over the births in the preceding year.

To simplify the case, assume that the rate of mortality has remained the same as it is in the present day*, and that the births bear the same relation to the population in Scotland as in England and Wales.

Annual births in Great Britain when the people of the age of 80 and upwards were born.

In 1851 there were 129,802 persons in Great Britain and the Islands in the British Seas of the age of 80 and upwards, who, upon the above hypothesis, are the survivors of about 20 times 272,440 children born annually in the twenty years 1750–70.† But on an average 604,792 births were registered annually in England and Wales during the five years 1849–53; and as the population of Scotland and the Channel Islands is to the population of England and Wales nearly in the proportion of 1 to 6, it may be assumed for the moment that the births in Great Britain and the Islands were about 705,591‡ in 1851. The births have therefore increased from about 272,440 in 1761, and less in 1751, to 705,591 in 1851. At the present rate of mortality, 272,440 annual births are required to sustain a population of 11,207,400, the representatives of the primary generation; the remaining 433,151 annual births, without any further increase in their numbers, will, if the mortality is constant, produce ultimately a population of 17,818,587, and thus make the population 29,025,987. The population of Great Britain is now only 21,185,010, because it includes only parts of the new generations annually commenced.

New generations by the annual increase of births.

Thus in England and Wales the births in 1849 were 578,159; while the births in 1850 were 578,159, and, in addition, 15,263, which may be considered the basis of a new generation. In 1851 the births were 615,865, or 578,159, and 15,263, and 22,443. By hypothesis, the 578,159 contribute to sustain the generations existing in 1849, the 15,263 to sustain the new generation of 1850, while 22,443 is the basis of the second new generation of 1851. Thus new tributaries flow at every age into the stream of population. By proceeding backwards from 1851, it will be evident that the last new generation will consist of children under one year of age, the last but one (1850) of children under two years of age, the last but two, commencing in 1849, of children under three years of age; and so each new generation, every year, in proceeding backwards to the date of its origin, will be found to contain persons a year older;

* See Registrar General's 6th Report, p. 560.

† By the Life Table 100,000 annual births sustain a population of 47,645 persons of the age of 80–100: consequently, at the same rate of mortality, 129,802 old people, of the age of 80–100, must have resulted from 272,440 annual births in 1750–70. The average number of baptisms in England and Wales in 1851 was 197,386; add one-sixth part, or 32,898, for baptisms in Scotland, and the number 230,284 is obtained, which leaves only 15·47 per cent. for the defective indication of births by baptism.

‡ The number 705,591 includes 615,865 births that were registered in England and Wales, and 89,726 as the probable number of births in Scotland and in the Islands in the British Seas.

some, therefore, of 20 years, 40 years, 60 years, 80 years. The general effect is, that when the births increase,—when new generations are every year created,—the mean ages of the population are to an equivalent extent below the standard of the primary generation, which is only represented in its just proportions by a Life Table.

Explanation of the remarkable increase in the numbers of men and women of the age 20–40 since 1821.

We will now endeavour to show how it is that the men and women in the prime of life have increased so much faster than the rest of the population. It is evident, upon inspecting the Table of Annual Baptisms, that they have fluctuated in numbers from year to year, and that they have increased at various rates: the rate of increase was only about 5 per cent. every ten years from 1705 to 1745; the decennial rate increased in the interval from 1745–1765 by 6 per cent.; from 1765 to 1805 the decennial rate slowly increased and was about 9 per cent.; from 1805 to 1815 it was 13 per cent.; from 1815 to 1825 it was 15 per cent.; from 1825 to 1835 it was only 6 per cent.* The births, which were not all registered, probably increased in somewhat similar ratios.

This partially explains the cause of the great increase of the population of the age of 20–40, in the 30 years from 1821 to 1851, as compared with the increase of the population under 20 and above 60 years of age.

Further explanation.

It is evident that the population in the beginning of the year 1821 under the age of 20 must have been born in the years 1801–20, that the population of the age of 20 and under 40 in that year must have been born in 1781–1800, and so on back to the years 1721–40, when the persons of the age 80 and under 100 were born. In like manner the persons in 1851 of the ages under 20 years must have been born in 1831–50, persons of the age of 20 and under 40 must have been born in 1811–30, and so on backwards. The population at each age in 1821 must have invariably been the survivors of persons born 30 years before the persons were born of which the population at each of the corresponding ages in 1851 were the survivors. Now the baptisms in 1811–30, when the persons of the age 20–40 in 1851 were born, exceeded the baptisms in 1781–1800 by 40 per cent.; the baptisms in 1791–1810, when the persons 40–60 were born, exceeded the baptisms in 1761–1780 by 30 per cent. In the intervals between the births of persons 60 and under 80, and 80–100 years of age, the baptisms of the latter period (1771–90) exceeded those in the previous period by only 17 per cent. We have no return of the Church baptisms in 1841–50; but it is evident that the excess of births was proportionally less in 1831 over the births in 1801–20 than the excess in the previous corresponding periods; which thus partly accounts for the diminution in the ratio of increase from 1821 to 1851 in the population under 20 years of age.

Effects of the prolongation of life on the increase of population.

The prolongation of the life of generations, as well as the increase of births, tends to increase the numbers living at one time; that is, the numbers of the population. Thus, of 100,000 children born in Liverpool, only 44,797 live to the age of 20, while in Surrey that age is attained by 70,885 out of the same number of children born: the probable lifetime is about 6 years in our unhealthiest towns, 52 years in Surrey, and other comparatively healthy parts.† In Manchester, where the mortality is high, 100,000 annual births only sustain, at the ages 20–40, a male population of 38,919; while in all England and Wales, where the mortality is now much lower, the same number of births produces a constant force of 61,215 men at that age; and at other ages similar disparities in the numbers living exist. Now, the mortality was not much less in all

* Derived from Table 21, p. lxviii.

† See Registrar General's 5th Report, 8vo. pp. 46, 47.—In Manchester 100,000 children born are reduced to about half that number (49,910) in six years.—Registrar General's 7th Report, p. 334.

England formerly than it is now in Manchester; and the great diminution in the mortality of England evidently took place at such a period of the last and present centuries as left proportionally more survivors at the ages 20–40 in 1851 than at the corresponding ages in 1821, for the dangers and loss of life incurred by the generations born in the 40 years 1781–1801 were greater than those which were encountered by the generations born in 1811–31.

ii. Ages of Males and Females.

Ages of the people of the great continental states have never been enumerated.

Although the classification of the population by age is the basis of the most important deductions, and is an indispensable preliminary to the construction of Tables for the guidance of Life Insurance and other practical purposes, the ages of none of the great European nations have ever been enumerated with any degree of completeness.

In Russia the ages of the population are not stated. In Austria the number of boys under the age of 15, of youths 15–18, and of men above the age of 18, only are distinguished: the ages of females are not stated. In Prussia the ages of the men are returned in some detail; but no attempt is made to place the women of Prussia in more than three classes, which are separated by the remote ages of 16, 45, and 60 years.* The ages of the French population have never been published. Now, as the importance of ascertaining, for military and other purposes, the numbers of the population at different ages, is unquestionably appreciated by the distinguished men who have conducted the great statistical inquiries of the continent, we infer that they have only left the inquiry unattempted because they believed their attempts to procure accurate accounts would fail to be successful. Indeed, a celebrated French writer has expressed his incredulity on this score without any reserve; and the motive of the suppression of the inquiry in the Censuses must have hitherto been the deep-seated suspicion that the ages of at least the fair part of the population of France, Germany, and Italy† could not be ascertained with any degree of accuracy.

Difficulties of the Inquiry in Great Britain.

That this inquiry is attended with some difficulties in England and Scotland has never been doubted. A large part of the population cannot write their names; many persons are living remote from the villages in which they were born; and some have forgotten their exact ages, as the baptisms have not been registered; or the copies of their family registers were not accessible on the Census day. The excess of numbers on the decennial years, such as 60 and 70, show on the face of the return that the exact age is in many instances unknown. And the cavillers at the returns of the ages of ladies in the middle of life have a primâ facie case for inquiry. But, taking all these circumstances into account, we are convinced that the results of the returns of ages, after slight corrections, are available for nearly every practical purpose to which they are likely to be applied.

The precise age was demanded for the first time in 1851.

In 1851 the precise age at the last birthday of each person in this country was, under the Census Act, for the first time demanded‡; and the opinion which we entertained, of the probable general accuracy of the returns within well-defined limits, is confirmed by the tabular results. The mean age of the females, as they are returned in England, exceeds the mean age of the males by ten months; so that the tendency in women to understate their ages has only

* The periods of life for Prussia are divided by the ages, for males 0, 5, 7, 14, 16, 20, 25, 32, 39, 45, 60; for females by the ages 0, 5, 7, 14, 16, 45, 60.

† A statistician of eminence informed M. Moreau de Jonnès, that, after many persevering but fruitless attempts, he abandoned in despair an inquiry having for its object to determine the ages of his wife and of his cook.

‡ In 1841 the Census commissioners allowed persons of the ages of 34, or 33, or 32 to call themselves 30; and so for other ages.

operated on comparatively small numbers; and there is no doubt of their general truthfulness.

Notoriety of the ages of persons of high birth.

The ages of women of high birth are published every year in the German almanacks, and in the Peerages—which are as accessible to the Public as any of the Calendars; so that it appears to be the rule with Lodge, Burke, Debrett, and the other genealogical chroniclers, only to omit the ages of peeresses who do not happen to be the daughters of princes or peers. The designation of age in England is a distinction; and, as the defects or excesses are exaggerated by the envious, it is a real advantage, which will be gradually extended to all classes of the community, by the genealogical records of the whole population, in the registers of births and deaths.

Reasons for believing that the ages would, on the whole, be correctly returned.

These considerations,—the veracity of English women,—and the successful enumerations of the ages of the allied Scandinavian populations,—strengthened the conviction that the truth would be stated as a general rule,—where it was known,—although the public objects of the inquiry may be often misconceived, and be imagined to be personal or inquisitorial.

Correction of some errors in the returns of ages.

A comparison of the series of numbers living at different ages, and of the numbers of males and females at the same ages, confirms this view; but it indicates, at certain ages, some evident mis-statements, which a comparison with the returns of ages in 1841 enables us to calculate and define. Persons of the age of 20 in 1851 must have been 10 years of age in 1841, and persons of the age of 25 in 1851 must have been of the age of 15 in 1841; and as there is a certain number of losses by death, it is evident that, excluding the effects of migration, the numbers at the age 20–25 in 1851 must be less than the numbers living at the ages 10–15 in 1841, of whom they (20-25) are the natural survivors. What are the statements which the abstracts of ages express?

1841. The number of girls, age 10–15, was - - -	1,003,119 *
1851. The number of young women, age 20–25, was, as stated in the returns - - - - -	1,030,456 *

Now, as the first number could never have swollen in ten years to the magnitude of the second, we are driven to the hypothesis that in 1841 and 1851 the heads of families returned several thousands of ladies of the higher ages at the age of 20–25; and the hypothesis is confirmed by comparing the diminished numbers returned at the age of 30–35 in 1851 with the numbers returned as 20–25 in 1841, where it is evident that the latter number is in deficiency as much as the former number is in excess.

1841. The number of young women of the age of 20–25, as stated in the returns, was - - - -	973,696 *
1851. The number of women of the age of 30–35, as stated in the returns, was - - - -	768,711 *

Singular errors in some of the statements of age.

The extensive immigration of the Irish into Great Britain during the ten years 1841–51 has exercised some disturbing influence on the proportions; but, upon comparing the above numbers with those for males at the corresponding ages, the conclusion appears to be inevitable that some 35,000 ladies, more or less, who have entered themselves in the second age, 20–40, really belong to the third age, 40–60; to which the body of delinquents are transferred in Table 7. Millions of women have returned their ages correctly; thousands have allowed themselves to be called twenty, or some age near it,—which happens to be the age at which marriage is most commonly contracted in England,—either because they were quite unconscious of the silent lapse of time,—or because their imaginations still lingered over the hours of that age, —or because they chose, foolishly, to represent themselves younger than they really were, at the scandalous risk of bringing the statements of the whole of their countrywomen into discredit. With some trouble these mis-statements and errors of age can be partially corrected, in the interpolated Table*; and at future Censuses, as the ages become better known, the errors, it may be sanguinely hoped, will not be repeated.

* These numbers are taken from the Population as enumerated, and not from the numbers estimated to the middle of the year 1851.

Exeess of females over males in Great Britain, 20–40.

After correcting the numbers of females at the middle ages to the extent above mentioned—it appears that the females exceed the males in and belonging to the country by 133,654 at the age 20–40; as the males were 3,193,496; the females (corrected) 3,327,150.

Exeess of females at advaneed ages.

At the more advanced ages the excess in the number of females is proportionally still greater; and the number of females of the age of 20 and upwards exceeds the number of males by 405,342. In 1841, the excess of females at the age 20 and upwards, was 370,125; while in 1821 the excess was only 266,533.

Under the age of 20 the number of males has exceeded the number of females at every Census; which is accounted for by the fact, that boys are born in greater proportions than girls, and that the excess in the mortality of boys does not neutralize the excess until the second age.

* See Tabular Results, p. elvii, Table 4.

Causes of the excess of males and of females at the respective ages.

The excess of females at the ages over 20 years is to be ascribed partly to the fact that the mortality of females is less than that of males, and to a considerable extent to the circumstance that Englishmen, for various reasons, travel abroad, go to the colonies, and also emigrate in greater numbers than women, Scotchmen die in greater numbers than Scotchwomen, or they leave the women of Scotland at home when they cross the Tweed as well as when they emigrate, and do not marry, or marry English wives; so that to 100 men at the ages 20–40; 40–60; 60–80; 80–100; the enumerators of 1851 found respectively 112, 117, 135, and 159 women in Scotland. This great disparity of the sexes, which pervades so many counties of Scotland, well deserves careful investigation, in connexion with the law of marriage, the household manners, and the occupations of the people.

Excess of females in Scotland.

Excess of women at home.

If the women of Great Britain at the age of 20 and upwards are compared with the men at home only, the numbers in excess are 540,579, and at the age of 20–40 the excess of women resident within the shores of Great Britain is 261,060. Many women at this age are, however, married to men of ages further advanced.

Excessive number of women in England and of men in the colonies.

The disparity in the number of men and women of the age of twenty and upwards is unnatural; and in the British colonies, and possessions where Europeans reside, as well as in the United States of America, the proportions are reversed. In 1840 the free white males in the States of all ages exceeded the females by 309,424; at the second age (20–40), the men exceeded the women by 156,379; or the two sexes of that age were nearly in the proportion of 14 men to 13 women.* The number of young people is as remarkable as the excess of males in the United States; for only one person in every six is forty years of age and upwards.

England. Proportion of males and females in different counties.

A comparison of the proportional numbers of the sexes in the different counties of England (see Appendix to Report, Table 10, p. clxiii) gives the following results. The females living at all ages were more numerous than the males in all except the eight counties of Monmouth, Stafford, Rutland, Lincoln, Oxford, Essex, Hereford, and Durham. In some of these counties mining operations furnish a large amount of employment to male labour. The excess of females is greatest in Gloucester (11 per cent.), in Somerset (10 per cent.), in Bedford, Cornwall, Dorset, Middlesex (extra-metropolitan), and Norfolk. In London, however, the females exceed the males in a larger proportion than in these counties, 113 females having been enumerated for every 100 males. The large number of female servants and of women employed in London in preparing articles of dress partly accounts for this excess.

Under 20 years of age.

At the first period of age, under 20 years, the females, instead of being generally in a majority, as at subsequent ages, are less than the males in all but nine counties; a natural effect of the law by which more males are born than females. London and the counties of Bedford, Gloucester, and Lancaster contain the largest number of females at this age; Rutland, Middlesex (extra-metropolitan), and Bucks the smallest. Counties of England. Ages of males and females.

Between 20 and 40 years of age, only four counties—Monmouth, Stafford, Durham, and Lincoln—contain more males than females. In Monmouth, where the greatest deficiency of females is observed, there are at this age only 85 women to 100 men. On the other hand, in Gloucester and Somerset, the women are more than 22 per cent. in excess of the men, in Devon 21, in Bedford 16, in Middlesex, Cornwall, Norfolk, Dorset, Sussex, Bucks, and Leicester, from 10 to 14 per cent. In London the women are as 119 to 100 men at this age. 20–40.

More women than men between the ages of 40 and 60 are found in London and in two-thirds of the English counties; the largest proportion of females (London excepted) is in Devon and Cornwall (113 to 100 males), Gloucester, and Somerset. In London the women exceed the men in the proportion of 116 to 100. With the exception of Monmouth, Stafford, and Hereford, the counties in which the females are in a minority at this age do not present disparities amounting to 4 per cent. 40–60.

Between 60 and 80 years of age the influence of the superior longevity of females is conspicuous in every county, especially in Cornwall, where the females exceed the males by 30 per cent., Somerset 25 per cent., Devon 22 per cent.; in Gloucester, Northumberland, South Wales, Durham, Middlesex, and North Wales. The excess is, however, still greater in London, where about 137 women are living to every 100 men at this age. 60–80.

In the last period, 80 years of age and upwards, the lower rate of mortality amongst females has influenced the relative numbers of the sexes in even a more striking degree. All the counties, with the single exception of Derbyshire, have more aged women than men. In Cornwall the excess is 71 per cent., in Middlesex 65 per cent., in South Wales 59, North Wales 53, and in Hereford, Worcester, Devon, Somerset, and Durham, from 51 to 52 per cent. Several other counties range above 30 per cent. It is remarkable that in London the proportion of women who have seen fourscore years and more should exceed that of any English county; but, whatever may be the explanation of the fact, it is certain that 197 women are living at this advanced age to every 100 men. 80 and upwards.

The circumstances already adverted to as contributing to cause the great disparity of the sexes in Scotland, appear to have acted upon nearly the whole of that part of the United Kingdom. At all ages the females predominate over the males, from 6 to 17 per cent., in 20 counties, while extreme instances of disparity occur in Bute (20 per cent. excess of females), and in Orkney and Shetland (27 per cent.). In one county only—Linlithgow—the females are in a minority; the numbers are there 98 females to 100 males. Counties of Scotland.

In the first age (0–20) the males, as might be expected, are generally more numerous; the exceptions are in four counties, where the difference is very slightly in favour of the females. Between 20 and 40 years of age, the preponderance of the females over the other sex is much more remarkable than at the same age in England; in Fife, Banff, Aberdeen, Nairn, Kinross, and ten other counties, they are from 20 to 33 per cent. in excess; in Bute, 43 per cent.; and in Orkney and Shetland the women, at this fruitful age of marriage, number 170 to every 100 men of 20 to 40 years of age. Taking the opposite extreme, we find, that in Linlithgow, where alone the males are more numerous than the females at this age, there are only 92 women to 100 men. Males and females under 20 years. 20–40.

Scotland. Males and females. 40–60.

Disparities nearly as striking are observable on comparing the proportions at the next period of age. In 14 counties the females between 40 and 60 are from 19 to 26 per cent. in excess of the males of the same age; in Edinburghshire there are 133, in Orkney and Shetland, 138, and in Bute 141 women, to 100 men.

60–80.

The number of females between 60 and 80 years of age preponderates over that of the males, to the extent of from 30 to 45 per cent. in more than half the Scottish counties; in Edinburghshire, 50 per cent.; in Caithness, 51; and in 80 and upwards.

Orkney and Shetland, 61 per cent. At the still more advanced age of 80 and upwards, the additional value of female life is strongly evidenced by the fact, that the aged women are more than 40 per cent. more numerous than the men in all but 7 counties, while in Aberdeenshire they are in a majority of 80 per cent., in Bute 81 per cent., and in Edinburghshire and Claekmannan they nearly reach the proportion of two women to one man.

The Islands in the British Seas.

In the Islands in the British Seas, the proportion of females at all ages is largest in Jersey (117 to 100 males), and smallest in the Isle of Man (110 to 100 males). The females at different periods of age generally exceed the proportional numbers observed in the English counties, and approach very closely to the state of things in Scotland. In Jersey there are two women aged 80 and upwards to each man of that advanced age. In this Island, and in some of the maritime counties of England and Scotland, the greater numbers of the women are probably, in some degree, attributable to the employment of the men in seafaring pursuits.

§ 2.—CIVIL OR CONJUGAL CONDITION OF THE PEOPLE.

i. Marriage and Family.

The family.

The family, consisting "of a head and of dependent members, living in the same dwelling," is, as has been shown in the previous report*, variously constituted; but the English family in its essential type is composed of husband, wife, children, and servants, or, less perfectly, but more commonly, of husband, wife, and children.

Marriage is therefore generally the origin of the elementary community of which larger communities, in various degrees of subordination, and ultimately the nation, are constituted; and on the conjugal state of the population, its existence, increase, and diffusion, as well as manners, character, happiness, and freedom, intimately depend.

Conjugal condition.

The importance of the inquiry—which has been carried out to some extent in other countries—has been long felt in England and Scotland, where theories of population have not only been discussed, but have been allowed to influence legislation, in the absence of any exact knowledge of the facts. In 1851, conjugal "condition" was one of the heads of inquiry; and the tabular results, in the present volume, show, for the first time, the number of bachelors and spinsters, husbands and wives, widowers and widows, in the several counties at every quinquennial period of life; and in the several districts at the ages of 20 and upwards. After an exposition of the principal facts, we shall notice briefly the solutions which they afford of some social questions interesting in a practical as well as a theoretical point of view.

Husbands, wives, widowers, widows.

Great Britain, according to the census returns, contains 3,391,271 husbands, and 3,461,524 wives; 382,969 men who have been husbands,—widowers; and

* See in p. xlii of First Report an analysis of 67,609 families.

795,590 women who have been wives,—widows. If we take only persons of the age of 20 and upwards, the bachelors amount to 1,689,116; the spinsters to 1,767,194. Bachelors and spinsters.

ii. Husbands and Wives.

The record of names, of relation to head of family, and of conjugal condition, in the householder's schedule, enables us to recognize the age of husband and wife; and also the number of married couples who slept in the house, or who were, accidentally or otherwise, separated from each other on the census night. It appears that 3,202,974 husbands and 3,202,974 wives slept in the same house. If the whole of the population had been in the country on that night, or if an equal proportion had been abroad, it is evident that the number of detached wives would be exactly equal to the number of detached husbands; but as the number of married soldiers, sailors, and travellers abroad is considerable, the number of separate wives may be expected to exceed the number of separate husbands. This was found to be the case. 188,297 husbands and 188,297 wives in Great Britain were enumerated in separate houses; and the husbands of 70,253 wives were out of the country*; for the total number of wives in houses from which their husbands are absent amounts to 258,550; so about 7·5 per cent., or nearly 1 in 13 married couples, were temporarily separated on the Census night. Husbands and wives. Husbands and wives at home and abroad.

The proportions varied at different ages. The great excess in the proportion of young wives at the age 15–20, whose husbands were absent, leads to the suspicion of some mis-statement or error.

In a certain number of cases the fact of marriage has been concealed, and in other cases, undoubtedly, women unmarried have been returned as married or widows. Errors from these sources act in opposite directions; and it is not probable that they are of such an extent as to affect any deductions that may be drawn from the general results at the later ages.

The Table may be read thus:—At the age 20 and under 25 there were 14,246 Husbands whose Wives were absent on the night of the 30th March 1851; or, to every 100 Husbands married there were 7·9 whose Wives were absent.

Upon a careful examination of several of the returns, it appears to be probable that some of those persons under the age of 20 who were returned as Wives or Husbands were not married.

* 162,490 soldiers and seamen belonging to Great Britain were abroad in 1851 when the Census was taken.

Proportion of males & females married.

The proportions of the married in the population of Great Britain amount to 33 in every 100 males, and to 32 in every 100 females, of all ages.

The proportions of the married among the population of the age of 20 and upwards are 62 in 100 males; 57 in 100 females.

About 1 in 3 of the whole population, and nearly 4 in 6 of the men, 4 in 7 of the women, of the age of 20 and upwards, are living in the married state.

The proportional numbers married of the age of 20–40 are 52 in 100 males; 55 in 100 females.

At the age 40–60 there are 79 in a hundred men, 70 in a hundred women, married; at the age 60–80, in 100 men there are 65, in 100 women 42, married; and, finally, at the age 80–100, while there are 37 in 100 men there are only 12 in 100 women married.

The Table may be read thus:—Of every 100 Males living in Great Britain of the age 25 and under 30, 45·045 are Bachelors, 53·790 are Husbands, and 1·165 are Widowers; and so for other ages.

Without the sanction of the laws of physiology, or of common sense, a gir may—but in the present day rarely does—marry at the age of 12, a boy at the age of 14, under the existing laws of England; but the consent of parents and guardians is required in certain cases where either party has not attained the age of twenty-one; and the proportional numbers of either boys or girls who marry under the age of 20 is happily small.* The mean age at which marriages are first contracted in England and Wales is 25·8 years for males, and 24·6 years for females; while 54 in every hundred brides, and 54 in every hundred bridegrooms, are 20 and under 25 years of age. As the marriages subsist on an average about 27 years, the numbers and proportions of persons in the married state increase as age advances, until they are reduced by the rapid dissolution of marriages by death. Thus, under the age of 20, of 100 youths only 0·4 are married; at 20–25 the proportion amongst men rises to 20; at 25–30 to 54; at 30–35 to 71; at 35–40 to 78; at 40–45 to 80; at 45–50 to 81 —in 100 at each age respectively. The proportional number of men in the married state declines after 55 and 60 rather rapidly, so that at the fifth age of 80 and upwards only 37 in 100 men have wives.†

Mean age of marriage.

Proportional number of men in the married state.

With respect to women, the proportions differ from those above; for at 15–20 the married are 2·5 per cent. of the whole number of that age living; at 20–25 the proportions rise to 30 per cent.; at 25–30 to 57; at 30–35 to 70; at 35–40 to 75 per cent., which is the highest proportion ever attained, as among women it never happens that more than 3 in 4 at any age are in the married state, while of men 4 in 5 at the age 40–50 are married.

Proportional number of women in the married state.

At the age 40–45, of 100 women 74 are married; and the proportion falls to 52 per cent. at the age 60–65, and to 12 per cent. at the fifth age of 80 and upwards, for then only 12 in a hundred women have husbands.

The proportional numbers of the persons in the married state at advanced ages are sustained by remarriages of widowers and widows; and as the widows remarry much less frequently than widowers, the comparison of the relative proportions of the married in both sexes shows that widowers enjoy a portion of the married life of men of 35, and a very considerable proportion of the married life after the age of 55.

The number of husbands in England and Wales is 2,958,564, of wives 3,015,634; the number of husbands in Scotland is 410,349, of wives 422,296. Thirty-four in 100 men, and thirty-three in 100 women, of all ages, in England and Wales, are married; while in Scotland thirty in 100 men, and only twenty-eight in 100 women, are married. Of 100 young men of the age 20–25 twenty are married in England and Wales, sixteen in Scotland; and the disparity diminishes, but the smaller proportion is on the side of Scotland, until the age of 65, when the proportional numbers of men living in the married state exceed in Scotland the proportions in England. Of 100 men of the age of 80 and upwards, 36 are husbands in England, 42 in Scotland.

Husbands and wives in England and Scotland.

Of 100 young women of the age of 20–25, thirty-one are married in England, twenty-five in Scotland, and the disparity between the conjugal condition of the women in the two divisions of the country remains through the whole of life, for at the age 35–40, when the proportions in the married state are greatest, seventy-six in 100 are married in England, while only sixty-seven in 100 women are married in Scotland, and at the age of 80 and upwards 13 women in 100 in England, and only 9 in 100 in Scotland, are in the married state.

Conjugal condition in England and Scotland.

* In 1851 the number of marriages in England was 154,206; and of the husbands, 146,469 were of full age, 7,737 were minors under the age of 21; 129,956 of the wives were of full age, and 24,250 were minors under the age of 21 on their marriage days.

† Diagrams of the Conjugal Condition of the Population.

The following diagrams will give perhaps a clearer idea of the variable conjugal condition of the population, as the Proportional number of women of the age 20–40 married in 84 counties.

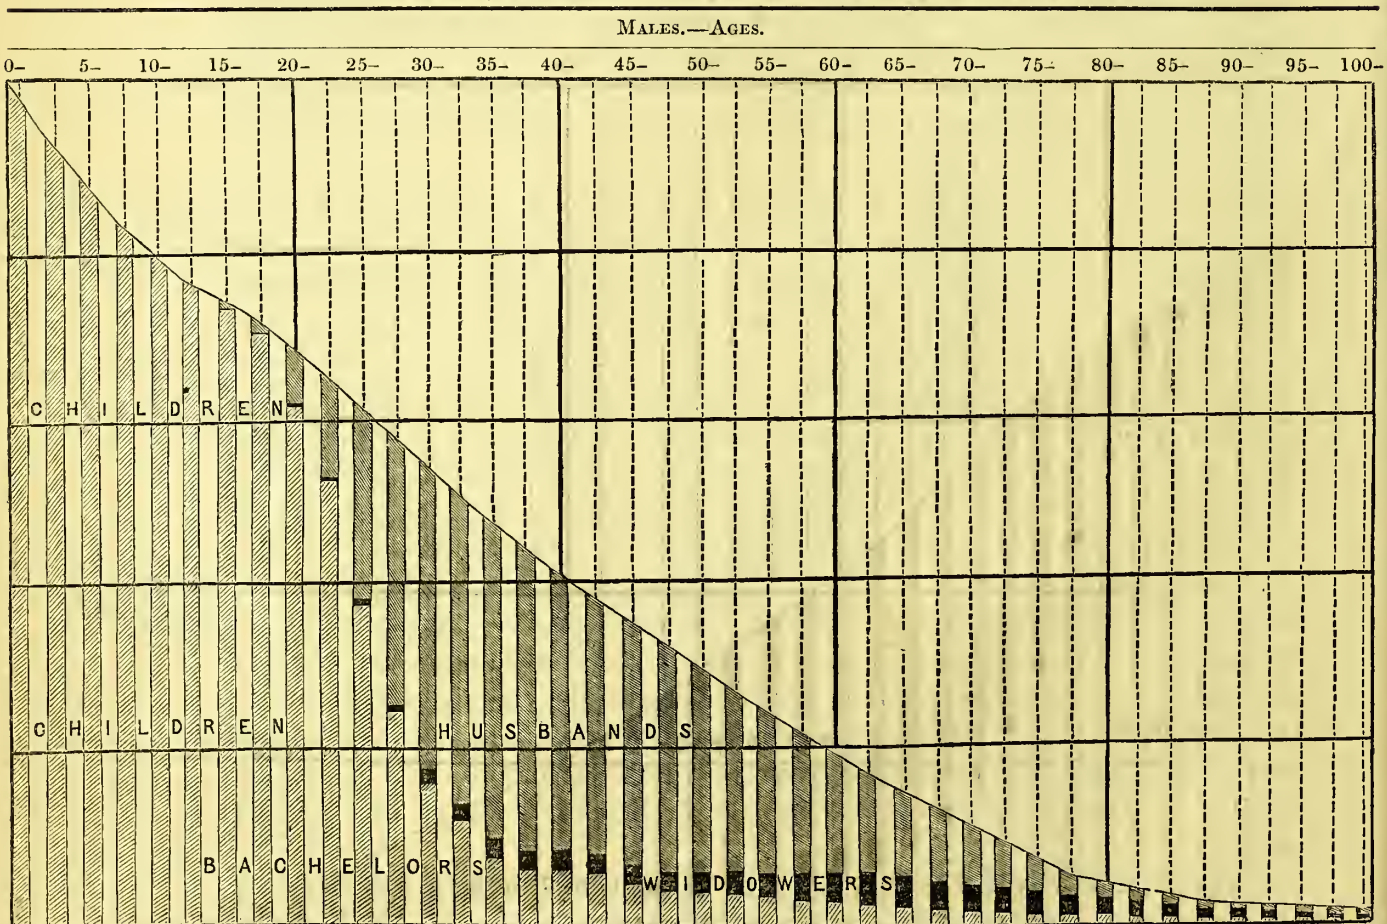
The Tables * show in what different proportions the married and single women exist in different counties. If the women in the prime of life—in the middle of the child-bearing age—are taken, it will be seen that in one county of England (Staffordshire) 65 in 100, in another (Westmorland) 49 in 100, are wives. In Scotland 57 in 100 women of the age 20–40 are wives in one county (Clackmannanshire); only 36 in 100 in another (Sutherlandshire). If two counties of Great Britain, at the extreme limits, are compared, it is found that of every three women in the prime of life (20–40), two are wives in one county, while only one is a wife and two are unmarried in the other county.

The eighty-four counties of Great Britain may be arranged in reference to the conjugal condition of women in seven classes, commencing at the counties in the lowest degree, where only 35 and under 40 in 100 women of the age 20–40 are married, and ascending to those in which 65 and under 70 per cent. of women of the same age are married.

1°. Counties having the lowest proportions of married women:—35 and less than 40 in 100 women of the age 20–40 are wives in the six Scotch counties, —Sutherland, Bute, Orkney and Shetland, Caithness, Inverness, and Nairn; and 60 to 65 in 100 women of the same age are UNMARRIED.



Married women of the age 20–40.

2°. Counties in which 40 and less than 45 in 100 women of the age 20–40 are wives, and from 55 to 60 are UNMARRIED :—the six Scotch counties of Ross and Cromarty, Elgin, Kirkcudbright (Stewartry), Perth, Peebles, Edinburgh.

numbers decline at successive periods of life, than can be acquired from the mere figures that follow, which have been deduced from the numbers in the population table.

The diagrams show the number of males and females,—married and unmarried,—at equal intervals of age; and it will be seen how much the number of husbands and wives in the second age (20–40) exceeds in proportion those in a stationary population, which may be conceived in its due proportions by imagining the diagrams to be depressed on the left-hand side to half their present elevation.

DIAGRAM representing the PROPORTIONS of MALES of DIFFERENT AGES, MARRIED and UNMARRIED.

The relative lengths of the lines are intended to indicate the relative numbers of Males living in England and Wales at the several Ages which figure at the top of the Diagram. The part of the line which is lightly shaded shows how much of the population is unmarried; the black, how many are Widowers, and the darkly-shaded part above what proportion is living in a state of marriage.

* See Tabular Results, Table 16, p. clxx.

3°. Counties in which 45 and less than 50 women in 100 of the age 20–40 are WIVES, and from 50 to 55 are UNMARRIED :—the ten Scotch counties of Wigtown, Aberdeen, Berwick, Haddington, Forfar, Dumfries, Banff, Kinross, Argyll, Roxburgh ; and one English county, Westmorland.

4°. Counties in which 50 and less than 55 women in 100 of the age 20–40 are WIVES, and from 45 to 50 are UNMARRIED :—the seven Scotch counties of Kincardine, Dumbarton, Renfrew, Selkirk, Fife, Stirling, Lanark ; the thirteen English counties of Middlesex, Gloucester, Somerset, Cumberland, Devon, Hereford, Surrey, Salop, Dorset, North Riding of York,* Cornwall, Sussex, Rutland, and the two groups of twelve Welsh counties.

5°. Counties in which 55 and less than 60 women in 100 of the age 20–40 are WIVES, and from 40 to 45 are UNMARRIED :—the three Scotch counties of Ayr, Linlithgow, and Clackmannan ; and the nineteen English counties of Northumberland, Chester, Berks, Lancaster, Norfolk, Wilts, Worcester, Oxford, Kent, Hants, East Riding of York (with City),* Nottingham, Leicester, Hertford, Derby, Lincoln, Bedford, Suffolk, Buckingham.

6°. Counties in which 60 and less than 65 in 100 women of the age 20–40 are WIVES, and from 35 to 40 are UNMARRIED :—the seven English counties of Warwick, West Riding of York,* Essex, Cambridge, Northampton, Monmouth, Huntingdon.

7°. Counties in which 65 and less than 70 in 100 women of the age 20–40 are WIVES, and from 30 to 35 are UNMARRIED : — the two English counties of Durham and Stafford.

DIAGRAM representing the PROPORTIONS of FEMALES of DIFFERENT AGES, MARRIED and UNMARRIED.

The Diagram may be read thus:—At the precise Age 25, less than half, or 40 in 100, of the women are Spinsters, and more than half of them, or 58 in 100, are Wives, the number of Widows at that Age being inconsiderable.

* In this statement the three Ridings of Yorkshire are enumerated as three separate counties.

In the northern counties of Scotland, where 44 women in 100 of the age 20–40 are wives, and generally in Wales, in the border counties of England, in Cornwall, Devon, and Somerset, and in London the proportional number of wives is lowest.

In the counties on the eastern coast, in the midland counties, in some manufacturing districts, and particularly in the English coal and iron districts, where the men are in excess, the proportion of women married at the marriageable age of 20–40 is greatest. The extensive range of the disparities in the conjugal condition of the population is remarkable.

iii. Age of Husband and Wife.

Relative age of husband and wife.

The average age of the wife in Great Britain is 40·65 years, of the husband 43·05 years of age, or the husband is 2·40 (nearly $2\frac{1}{2}$) years older than the wife. In the ages of the husband and of the wife there is a general accordance; but there are also considerable disparities, which, as they are in many ways important, are elaborately exhibited. The series of cross tables requires some explanation, for such tables have never before been employed in the analysis of the conjugal condition of the people.* These tables enable us to show the ages of every married pair that was enumerated in the same house on the census-night; and it is with these pairs alone that we have to deal in the present part of the inquiry into relative ages.

The tables † show for each division and county, as well as for England, Wales, and Scotland, facts of the same kind for each quinquennial age,

The Table may be read thus:—Of 180,997 men who were of the mean age of 17 years, 795 were Husbands; 16 were Widowers; and 180,186 were Bachelors. Of 180,943 women of the age seventeen, 4,553 were Wives; 53 were Widows; and 176,337 were Spinsters; and so on for the other ages given in the Table.

* Tables of nearly a similar construction have been for some years employed in the Registrar General's Reports, to show the ages at which people marry; and we believe that for this purpose the ingenious construction was first employed in the official returns of Belgium.

† Note.—The tables in this section report the facts as they were returned, without any correction.

namely, the number of husbands in every quinquennial period of life, and the ages of their wives. Thus, in Great Britain. 479,200 husbands of the age of 30 and under 35 are found to be married to wives of the following ages :—

Age 15– 20– 25– 30– 35– 40– 45– 50– 55– 60– 65– 70– 75– 80– 85– 90–
Number 1,084; 34,908; 152,654; 212,092; 59,609; 14,495; 3,114; 943; 195; 78; 17; 9; 1; 0; 0; 1.

The wives of 152,654 of the husbands are of the age 25 and under 30, while the still greater number, 212,092, have wives of the same age-period (30–35) as themselves, and the wife of one man was of the age of 90 and upwards.

Again, 498,044 WIVES of the age 30–35 were found to be married to husbands of the following ages :—

Age 15– 20– 25– 30– 35– 40– 45– 50– 55– 60– 65– 70– 75– 80– 85–
Number 35; 5,843; 59,537; 212,092; 139,622; 53,035; 16,434; 6,991; 2,290; 1,327; 446; 261; 77, 40; 14.

Here 35 wives of the age 30–35 are found to be married to men under the age of 20; 212,092 to men of their own age-period; and 14 to men of the age 85–90.

In the subjoined Table the comparative ages of husbands and wives are shown in twenty-year periods of life.

Reading vertically,—1,703,475 Wives of 20–40 were married to 1,620 Husbands under the Age of 20; to 1,397,453 Husbands of 20–40; and so on.

And the ages are shown over shorter periods (decennial periods) in the next Table; while the numbers at every period of five years of age are shown in the Tabular Results and Summaries.

iv. Equality and Disparity of Age of Husband and Wife.

Equality and disparity of ages.

The cases in which the husband and wife are precisely of the same age must be of rare occurrence; but the number of cases in which the husband and wife were born in the same year is considerable; and in 3,202,974 pairs the ages of

Of 100 HUSBANDS of the particular Age 45 and under 50 there were found to be 35·9 married to Wives of the same period of life, 49·5 to Wives younger than the Age 45, and 14·6 older than the Age 50.

Again: Of 100 Wives of the particular Age 45–50; 38·8 had Husbands of that Age (45–50), and 19·7 had Husbands younger than 45, while 41·5 had Husbands older than the Age of 50.

The Table may be read without reference to the decimal points, and will then show the proportional numbers to 1,000 Husbands and to 1,000 Wives respectively.

1,299,008 pairs fall in the same quinquenniad, 1,954,519 in the same decenniad, and 2,574,952 (or four fifths) in the same vicenniad. Women of the age of 20–40 give birth, probably, to seven in every eight children; and it is seen that of 1,703,475 wives of the age 20–40 there are 1,397,453 married to husbands of that age; 297,045 to husbands of 40–60; while only 1,620 of these wives are united to husbands under 20; and 7,357 to husbands of 60 and upwards.

Disparities of age.

The disparities of age are generally in the direction that popular observation would indicate; for while the age of the husband and wife falls in 1,299,008 instances within the same quinquenniad, the wife belongs in 1,409,275 instances to the earlier ages, and in only 494,691 instances to the ages older than the age of the husband. The degree of disparity differs, and is greatest at the extreme age of either sex.*

Relative ages of husband and wife.

The disparity of age has a wide range; and the returns show one instance in which a man of 30–35 is married to a woman of 90–95, and four in which men of 95–100 are married to women of 45–50. In one instance it appears in

If the tendency to the conjugal union is expressed by 1·00000 at the ages 40–50, between Husbands and Wives of that age, then the disposition to the married state between Husbands and Wives 10, 20, 30 years older than themselves, is indicated by the decreasing fractions ·14602; and ·00373; and ·00068. Fractions may be deduced with the same facility for other ages.

* See Table 16, p. xxxvi, and Summary Table xvi, p. cexiv.

the Tables that a girl of 18 is married to a man of 100; but this is an error. There is a certain regularity in the numbers that marry at different ages, and in such a degree as indicates that the acts which appear to result from arbitrary volition and chance are the result of regulated contingencies, which in their course obey laws and follow rules as definite as any that sway the relations of the physical phenomena of inorganic matter. Thus the tables show, that while 124,155 husbands are united to wives of the same age-period as themselves (45–50), there are 38,078, 9,126, 2,488, 618, 157, 46, who are married to women respectively on an average 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and 30 years older than themselves. Now, the proportion of the first number to the second is nearly as $3\frac{1}{4}$ to 1; and from 38,078 a series is obtained, on successively dividing by 4, not differing much from the numbers in the actual series. The theoretical series is 38,078, 9,520, 2,380, 595, 149, and 37. If all the numbers are examined of men who are married to women of ages higher than their own, it will be found that, notwithstanding many deviations, a similar series can generally be deduced by dividing the number of those who married wives five years older than themselves successively by the successive powers of a number to which 4 is an approximation. Hence the tendency, whatever it may be, which unites husbands to wives older than themselves diminishes for every 5 years the excessive age of the wife increases—in the proportions 1, 4, 16, 64, 256, and 1,024. The tendency in marriage is stronger that unites husbands to wives of the same age-period; and it would appear that the reciprocal attractiveness of the sexes diminishes in the distance of age at rates which may ultimately be expressed by some simple mathematical formula.

Proportional numbers of husbands and wives of various ages.

It will be noticed in the Tables 18. and 19. that at every period of life the proportion of wives older than their husbands is much less than the proportion of husbands older than their wives; the ratio of wives at every advance of ten years over the age of husbands after the first interval, taking one with another, is about 13 to 100. Thus, to 100 wives who are married to husbands 20 years younger there are 13 wives married to husbands 30 years younger than themselves; and again, to 100 wives who are married to husbands 30 years younger there are 13 wives married to husbands 40 years younger than themselves. The average ratio of cases in which husbands are found to be married to wives older than themselves at the same intervals is expressed by about 7 at the advanced age to 100 at the age 10 years younger.

Useful applications of real knowledge.

Without entering into any further or profounder analysis, it is sufficiently evident that the returns open a new field of philosophical inquiry into a subject which has hitherto been treated lightly; and that the fortune-teller may yet share the glory or the shame of the astrologists and the alchemists, whose success was the evidence of undiscovered truth, as well as of their bold rapacity and of mankind's credulity. The passions and affections of men are governed by laws as certain as those of the heavenly bodies; but it is not true—as the phenomena are complicated—that the acts of particular individuals can always be predicted; and in discarding this notion we get rid of the vulgar error: but it is true that the acts of numbers of individuals can be predicted with sufficient certainty for practical purposes; for the marriage returns, and these enumerations, in conjunction with the Life Table, furnish the means of calculating the chances that a man or woman, young or old, and unmarried, will marry before, in, or after a given year of age,—of calculating the probability of remaining a spinster or a bachelor, or of being in the married state at any given age,—the probability of bearing children,—or of being a widower or a widow; and these calculations will serve, not merely to gratify idle curiosity, but to guide the course of men's lives, to regulate the population, to make provisions for children who marry as well as for those who do not marry, and to direct the establishment and conduct of social institutions which may mitigate the calamities of premature death.

v. Widowers and Widows.

Numbers who become widowers or widows equal to number of marriages.

As it can rarely, if ever, happen that a husband and wife die in the same instant of time, it may be assumed that, practically, every marriage is dissolved by the death of the husband or the wife separately; whence it follows, as a necessary corollary, that as many widowed persons are left annually as there are annual marriages in a stationary population. The sum of those who become widowers and widows during the year, in such a state, is equal to the sum of the marriages, and to half the sum of the persons married in the same time.

Numbers of widows and wives, widowers and husbands, proportionate to joint and separate lifetime.

The *after-lifetime at the average age of marriage is 35·9 years for a man, and 37·8 years for a woman; but the union of two persons of such ages and life expectancies only endures 27·0 years on an average, leaving the widower 8·9 years, the widow 10·8 years to live. To every 100 husbands who have married once, in a stationary community, there would be about 33 widowers, and to every 100 wives, 40 widows. Instead of 33 and 40, which are the results of the above hypothesis, the actual proportions are 11 widowers to 100 husbands, and 22 widows to 100 wives; but these proportions are immediately altered by withdrawing from the ranks of the married those who have, at one time, been widowers or widows. Thus, if of the 3,461,524 wives in Great Britain, 271,841 are widows re-married, 3,189,683 wives who have been only once married will remain; which, when compared with the widows re-married (271,841) and the (795,590) widows enumerated, making 1,067,431 in the aggregate, is found to give the proportion of 33 widows to 100 wives.† The number of widows and widowers in the population is thus largely reduced by re-marriages; but it is still kept much below the average by the further disproportionate excess of numbers at the earlier periods of life in the British population. As age advances the proportional numbers of widows increase. At the age of 25–30 two per cent. of the women are widows; at the age 30–35 four per cent.; at the age 35–40 seven per cent.; in the next period (40–45) ten per cent.; and so the proportional numbers in 100 increase until at the age 65 the number of widows slightly exceeds the number of wives (43); of 100 women at the age of 80 and upwards 75 are widows, 12·6 unmarried women, and only 12 wives. The proportional number of widowers also increases, but at a much less rapid rate, on account, chiefly, of their frequent re-marriages.

Numbers of widows increase as age advances.

Integral and imperfect families.

It is evident that if all men and women lived through the whole cycle of natural life, whether it were a hundred years, or fourscore or threescore or two-score years,—whatever the lifetime were,—and a man married invariably a wife of his own age, there would be neither widowers nor widows in the world; as husband and wife, descending the vale of years together, would live the same life, and die on the same day. The actual state of things is very different; for while there are 3,391,271 integral families‡, as they may be called, there

* The after-lifetime is the average number of years that persons live after any given age.

† In the year 1851, in England and Wales, 13,875 widows and 21,563 widowers were remarried, probably at the mean ages 38·0 and 40·5 years, for those were the ages of 5,206 widows and 7,792 widowers whose ages at marriage were registered. The mean age at marriage of bachelors was 25·8 years; and of spinsters, 24·6 years.

‡ These families, it is here assumed, are represented by the number of husbands in Great Britain.

are 1,178,559 families in a state of dissolution by the premature death of the husband or wife—the father or the mother—at their head. This state of things is one of the most deplorable results of untimely death. The existence of 382,969 widowers and of 795,590 widows, some of tender age, in every class of society, and in every part of the country, who have been left,—as well as their companions that have been taken,—by fever, consumption, cholera, and the cloud of diseases that at present surround mankind,—stand like sad monuments of our mortality, of our ignorance, negligence, and disobedience of the laws of nature, and as memorials, at the same time, we may hope, of the sufferings from which the people may be delivered by sanatory discoveries and observances.

The number of widows varies with the mortality of husbands.

The number of widows, who are every year left, depends on the mortality of the husbands, and increases to a certain extent in a corresponding ratio. Where the rate of mortality among husbands is doubled, the number who become widows is also doubled. Thus, when the mortality of husbands is 1 in 36, of wives 1 in 38, annually, this happens:—of 1,368 marriages, 1,295 subsist at the end of the year, and 73 are dissolved; 37 by the death of the husband, 35 by the death of the wife, and 1 by the death of both husband and wife. The 37 widows are to the sum of the 1,295 wives and 37 widows in the proportion of 1 to 36. Let the rate of mortality rise to 2 in 36 husbands annually, then the widows who are left will be to the wives and widows surviving as 1 to 18, or 2 to 36.*

Any diminution in the mortality of men will therefore diminish the relative number of widows; but, under the most favourable circumstances, the number of widows, as well as the number of old people, in the British population, will increase as the age of the present generation advances, and will require a corresponding increase in the provision for their sustenance.

Joint and longest lifetime of husband and wife.

The conjoint life of the husband and wife in England varies accidentally in individual cases, but bears a certain relation to their age at marriage, and at the actual age of marriage continues on an average about 27 years, when the children who survive attain the marriage age; while one or other of the parents lives on an average 47 years.

Proportional numbers of widows in England and Scotland.

The proportional number of widows varies in different parts of Great Britain, from various causes, as it depends on the number of marriages, the mortality of husbands and of widows, the greater or less disposition to remarriage, and the accidental congregation in certain towns of women living on small annuities.

In England and Wales 7·2, in Scotland 8·4, in the Islands of the British Seas 9·1, in 100 of the female population, are widows; and 3·8 in England and Wales, 3·4 in Scotland, and 3·4 in the Islands, out of 100 males of all ages, are widowers. There are proportionally more widows and fewer widowers in Scotland than in England; which may perhaps be accounted for by widowers marrying again more and widows less frequently in Scotland than in England. At the age of 40–60 sixteen in England, and nineteen in Scotland, out of 100 women of that age, are widows; at 60–80 forty-five in England and forty-seven in Scotland are the proportions, which at 80–100 ascend to seventy-six in England and to seventy in Scotland, where old widows probably experience a high mortality, as until lately the provision for the sustenance of the aged poor was more imperfectly organized in Scotland than in England.

Of women of the age of 20 and upwards, 13 in 100 are widows in England, 15 in Scotland; while of 100 men of that age 7 are widowers in England, 7 in Scotland. The husbands are to the widowers nearly as 9 to 1 in England;

* If a is the number of husbands, out of which nd die in a given time, then the widows will be to the whole number of women (wives and widows) left as nd to a. The mortality of the wives has no effect on these relative proportions.

the wives to the widows nearly 4 or 5 to 1; or, more exactly, as 100 to 11 widowers and to 21 widows respectively. In Scotland the husbands are to the widowers as 9 to 1; the wives to the widows only as 3 or 4 to 1. The proportion of widows to women of the age of 20 and upwards ranges in the counties of England from 11·3 to 14·5. In the counties of Sussex (11·9), Bedford (11·7), Stafford (11·3), Nottingham (11·9), Derby (11·6), the West Riding of York (11·9), the proportional number of widows is less than 12 per cent., and little exceeds one in eight women; in Cornwall (14·5), Hereford (14·1), Northumberland (14·2), Cumberland (14·3), North Wales (14·0), it exceeds 14 per cent., and one woman in seven is a widow. The other counties occupy intermediate stations. Widows in different counties.

The proportion of widowers and widows in men and women of the age of 20 and upwards has been calculated for every district of England, and it is found that in London the proportion of widows in 100 women exceeded 14:—in Chelsea, 16·1; Holborn, 15·3; East London, 15·2; West London, 16·9; Shoreditch, 15·1; St. George-in-the-East, 17·0; Stepney, 16·9; St. Saviour, Southwark, 16·0; St. Olave, Southwark, 19·2; St. George, Southwark, 15·2; Newington, 15·1; Rotherhithe, 16·4; Greenwich, 16·1. In London generally the healthiest districts contain the smallest proportion of widows; thus Lewisham had only 12, Hampstead 12·5, Hackney 12·9, widows in 100 women. Widows in London districts.

The healthier districts of Surrey are still more distinguished; for Reigate had only 9·9 widows in 100 women: Cuckfield in Sussex had 9·7. In these districts the wives are to the widows, and perhaps the united life of marriage to the disjointed life of widowhood, as 7 to 1; whereas in St. Olave, Southwark, the wives are to the widows only in the proportion of 3 to 1. Widows in English districts.

At Walsall there is an extraordinary result; the widows are only 9·6 in 100 women, although the mortality is not low in that district at all ages; but it is low among men of the age 25–45, and the widows evidently remarry, for 72 in 100 women are wives. The widows exceed 15 per cent. in the following districts: in Canterbury they are 15·3, in Bury St. Edmunds 15·3, Yarmouth 16·4, Salisbury 16·2, Plymouth 15·4, Stoke Damerel 16·3, Truro 15·9, Falmouth 16·2, Helston 15·5, Redruth 17·1, Scilly Islands 16·5, Bath 15·5, Bristol 16·6, Weobly (Hereford) 15·5, Tenbury 16·2, Hull 15·8, Whitby 16·3, South Shields 15·9, Tynemouth 15·7, Alston 21·4*, Whitehaven 15·7, Cockermouth 15·5, Carmarthen 15·3, Narberth 15·2, Cardigan 15·2, Aberayron 15·2, Dolgelly 15·1. The great number of widows in the ports indicates the loss of great numbers of men at sea, of whom little other record is left than these relicts.

In the counties of Scotland the proportion of widows in 100 women of the age of 20 and upwards ranged from 11·1 in Selkirk to 16·8 in Bute; in Renfrew it was 16·3; Lanark 15·6; Edinburgh 16·2; Forfar 15·0; Aberdeen 15·1, Argyll 15·9; in no other county did the proportion exceed 15. Widows in Scottish counties.

If, however, we compare the widows with the wives, it is found that in Caithness, in the Orkneys and Shetlands, and in several counties, the wives are to the widows as little more than 3 to 1. In Edinburghshire and Buteshire the widows are in a still higher proportion.

The whole series of tables deserves to be carefully studied by the inhabitants of the several parts of England and Scotland, as the information it contains is equally interesting and important, touching, as it does, the existence and duration of families.

* Of 1,765 males of the age 20 and upwards, 1,038 are lead-miners.

vi. The Unmarried: Bachelors and Spinsters.

If all the persons above the legal ages of marriage (14 years in the male and 12 years in the female) who have never married are to be so designated, it will follow that Great Britain contains 3,110,243 bachelors and 3,469,571 spinsters; or, if this condition is dated from the age of 15, the bachelors in the country are 2,709,994; the spinsters 2,786,587. We take the age of 20, one year antecedent to the age of 21, as the date applicable to both sexes, and then find at that age and upwards 1,689,116 bachelors and 1,767,194 spinsters. Some subdivision of these large classes is necessary; and if for the moment those of the age of 20 and under 40 years are called "young," and those of the age of 40 and upwards are called "old," it will be found that there are in the kingdom about 1,407,225 "young" and 359,969 "old" maids; 1,413,912 "young" and 275,204 "old" bachelors. The line that separates the two stages of unmarried life is to a certain extent arbitrary; for it is as difficult for scientific purposes to say where the first stage ends and the second begins in the general population, as it is, in the popular usage, to apply the epithets justly in particular instances. Without pretending to decide or to pronounce an opinion upon the exact turning point of age, we call attention to the important fact, that while there are 1,848,853 wives in this second age, 20–40, we have 1,407,225 spinsters returned who are not and never have been married, against 1,413,912 bachelors of the corresponding period of life.

Bachelors and spinsters.

Spinsters of the age 20–40.

Of every 100 women in Great Britain of the age of 20–40 forty-two are spinsters; while forty-one are spinsters in England, and forty-eight are spinsters in Scotland, out of every 100 women of the same age.

Bachelors and spinsters of the age 20 & upwards.

Of 100 men of the age of 20 and upwards, 31 are bachelors in Great Britain; 30 in England and Wales, 35 in Scotland, 31 in the Islands in the British Seas. Of 100 women of the ages 20 and upwards in Great Britain 29 are spinsters; in England and Wales 28, in Scotland 36, in the Islands 32.

Distribution of bachelors over English counties.

The proportion of bachelors in 100 men of the age of twenty and upwards is below 25 in the three midland counties of Bedford (22·9, which is the lowest), Buckingham, and Huntingdon. It is 25 and under 30 in Northampton, Cambridge, Hertford; in all the eastern counties,—Suffolk, Norfolk, and Essex; in all the south-western counties—Wilts, Somerset, Dorset, Cornwall, Devon; in Warwick, Gloucester, and Worcester of the west midland counties; in three of the north midland counties,—Leicester, Nottingham, and Derby—in Chester, and in the West Riding of York. Thus generally in the midland and in the eastern counties the proportion of bachelors is much below the average. Upon the other hand, the proportion of bachelors is 33 or more per cent. in Kent, Hants, Salop, Hereford, and South Wales; in the three northern counties, Northumberland and Cumberland and Westmorland, the proportion exceeds 35, and in Westmorland is so considerable as 36 per cent. The other counties occupy intermediate places. In Bedford 23, in Westmorland 36, in a hundred men are bachelors; and these are the two extremes of the proportion in England. But upon passing the borders into Scotland the proportional numbers of bachelors rapidly increase. Only in the Orkneys and Shetlands is the proportion so low as 29, in Fife as 31; in all the other Scottish counties the proportion exceeds 32; it exceeds 36 and approaches 40 in Bute, Dumbarton, Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Peebles, among the Southern Counties; and in Perth, Kincardine, Aberdeen, Elgin, Argyll, Ross and Caithness, in the Northern Counties. In Nairn, Inverness, and Sutherland 40 and rather more in 100 men are bachelors.

Bachelors in Scotland.

Spinsters of the age of 20 and upwards.

The distribution of spinsters over the country is, as might be expected, not very different from that of bachelors. The average for England is 28 spinsters in 100 women. Now in seven counties the proportion is less than 25; namely, in Northampton, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Essex, Stafford, Durham, and Monmouth: the proportion 30 is exceeded in Surrey, Sussex, Devon, Somerset; nearly 32 in Gloucester and Cumberland; 32 in London, and 33 in Middlesex (Extra-Metropolitan) and Westmorland. In Ayr, Lanark, Linlithgow, and Clackmannan only of the counties of Scotland is the proportion of spinsters less than 32 in 100; in Kirkcudbright and Bute the proportion exceeds 40, and in several of the southern counties approaches it; over the northern counties of Scotland the proportion of spinsters increases, and exceeds 40 in Perth, Elgin, Nairn, Inverness, Ross, Caithness, and the Orkneys and Shetlands; in Sutherland nearly 46 in 100 women are spinsters.

Where spinsters most abound.

In the coal and iron districts of the country the spinsters are proportionally few; in London they are numerous, as there is a demand for their services.

Bath, Cheltenham, Brighton, and (in London) the districts of Kensington, St. George Hanover Square, St. James Westminster, Hampstead, Hackney, and the city of London, contain generally a great excess (40 per cent.) of spinsters, who for various reasons and purposes are congregated in these localities. Bath and Cheltenham, two watering-places, are the only districts in England that have so many as 41 spinsters in every 100 women; while this proportion is quite common in many counties of Scotland.

The distribution of women over England and Scotland who are not now in the married state, but are either widows or spinsters, of the age of 20–40, has been already indicated.

vii. Natural Families and Children.

Families—childless and childful.

A great number of married people have no children living; and it was shown in the previous Report from a limited but perhaps a sufficient number of facts, that about 28 in 100 married pairs had no children residing with them on the Census night. From other observations it may be estimated, however, that not more than 20 in 100 families are childless, and consequently that about 80 in 100 have children living. Of 100 widowers and widows, 59 had children, 41 had no children residing with them.*

If the 3,461,524 wives are taken to represent the married pairs, it may be inferred from the above proportions that about 984,100 have no children residing with them, and that 692,305 have no children living. Of the 1,178,559 widowers and widows, about 695,480 have children, and 483,079 have no children, residing with them.

Resident sons and daughters.

The resident sons and daughters, including those advanced in years, of the married pairs, are about 6,766,458; while the children with the widowers and widows are about 1,509,520 in number. These orphans have lost either their father or mother. The orphans who have lost both parents have not been numbered, and cannot be estimated.

The 6,766,458 sons and daughters residing with the married pairs are singularly enough nearly equal in number to the 6,923,048 husbands and wives of which those pairs consist; but these children were attached to 4,954,848 of the married persons (nearly 3 children to 2 parents), leaving 1,968,200 without children in charge. In like manner the 1,509,520 orphans were attached to 695,474 widowers or widows, in the proportion of more than 2 to 1, leaving 483,085 widowers or widows without apparent charge.

Families of widowers and widows.

If it be assumed, for the moment, that each wife, widower, or widow represents a family, then Great Britain has 4,640,083 natural families; of which 3,172,898 have children attached, and 1,467,185 have no children resident, and probably more than a million families are childless.

* Of 42,023 families having a husband and wife as head in different parts of the country, 11,947 had no children 30,076 had 82,145 resident children. Of 10,854 widowers and widows, 4,449 had no children, 6,405 had 13,902 children, residing with them on the Census-night. First Census Report, 1851, p. xliii.

Families.

Upon the other hand, if of the widowers and widows two are taken to constitute one family, the natural families amount to 4,050,804, having resident with them 8,275,978 children, and consisting in the aggregate of 16,377,586 persons, or 4 to a family. As the nation consists of more than 21 million persons—including servants, children absent from their parents, bachelors, spinsters, and others, —there are rather more than 5 persons to one such family. Upon this important subject we have thought it right to give these merely approximative results.

Unmarried women and children.

To complete the view of the conjugal condition of the people in reference to population, the fact must be noticed, that in this, as in every other country, a certain number of the children are the offspring of unmarried women. In 1851

the births of 615,865 living children were registered in England and Wales,* 573,865 as the children of married, and 42,000 as the offspring of unmarried women; and the census returns show that the women of the age 15–55 married were 2,553,894; the women unmarried, including widows as well as spinsters, 2,449,669. So that to 100 married women of that age 22·47 living children are born annually, and to 100 unmarried women 1·7 living children are annually born. Upon the hypothesis that as many unmarried women must cæteris paribus, be living irregularly to every child born out of wedlock as there are wives to every child born in wedlock, then 186,920, or 1 in 13 of the unmarried women, must be living so as to contribute as much to the births as an equal number of married women. A certain class of cases countenances the belief that the numbers and proportions are understated—others, that they are overstated—by such a hypothesis. But as the mothers of so many as probably 7 in 8 children are of the second age (20-40) when 100 married women have 31 children annually, it will follow that 42,000 children out of wedlock may be borne by about 136,728 women of that age (20-40), or by about 9 (exactly 9·129) in every 100 of the 1,248,182 unmarried women. Nearly 1 in 11 may be struck off the list of spinsters by this estimate, which appears, on the whole, to be of the two the nearest approximation to the truth; thus leaving, out of 1,248,182 unmarried women 1,111,454 living in celibacy in the prime of life (20-40), against 1,744,944 women, namely 1,608,216 wives and 136,728 women who are not wives, who bear children. Now, some conception of the voluntary control that is exercised over the numbers of the population may be obtained by considering that the births are proportional to the number of married women, who at this age may be raised in the proportion of 2 to 3 by the simple transfer to their ranks of a portion of the 1,111,454 unmarried; and, further, that an increase of the actual births by one third part or by one half would certainly double the rate at which the population has increased for the last half century. For the sake of simplifying the statement, the whole of the births have been here referred to the women of the age of 20-40; but it is well known that in America great numbers of women marry and bear children at the ages under 20, when in Great Britain only 25,607 are wives, and more than a million young women are spinsters.

A large number of men and women in Great Britain never marry.

(1) In every part of Great Britain a large number of men and women who live to advanced ages never marry. Of the population at the ages of 20

* The data for this calculation cannot be procured for Scotland or for the Islands in the British Seas.

and upwards, about 1 in ten men and 1 in eight women may be referred to this category; or in Great Britain one in ten of the survivors of the young men now living, and one in eight of the survivors of the young women now living, will die as bachelors and spinsters if they live to the age of 60 and upwards; besides the great numbers who die unmarried at younger ages. Celibacy, as well as marriage without children, is therefore to be considered the natural state of a portion of the population; for under no circumstances that can be conceived will the whole of the people marry. Certain duties of the most exalted as well as of the humblest kind in the world are most efficiently performed by these classes; and although the proposition, that "the best works and of greatest merit for the public have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men" may not be absolutely true, as it is put by Bacon*; they have unquestionably contributed their full share to public works, which often absorb the powers of mind to an extent that would embarrass him that in "wife and children has given hostages to fortune." There is also evidently a large number of both sexes in this class who from infirmity and diseases, either acquired or hereditary, cannot marry, and some who have a total disinclination to marriage.

The births exceed the deaths.

(2) The births in England and Wales now greatly exceed the deaths, as is shown by the registration of 615,865 births and 395,174 deaths in the year 1851, leaving an excess of 220,691 births. This number differs little from the average numbers in England and Wales: and although the excess in Scotland is proportionally less, it is considerable, as is proved by the increase of population in that part of the kingdom.

Possible number of births.

(3) The British population contains a great reserve of more than a million unmarried men, and of more than a million unmarried women, in the prime of life, with as many more of younger ages; and if the whole of the population were married the births in Great Britain would, instead of seven hundred thousand, be about sixteen hundred thousand annually, if they bore the same proportion to the wives at different ages as they do now.

Perpetuity of the race secured.

(4) The perpetuity of the British race is thus secured against all contingencies; but it is evident that without some such reserve in all times—it may have perished, either in the great famines, pestilences, and intestine wars which are recorded in its history, or that must have befallen it in the still more perilous ages preceding the Roman invasions.

Can the population be sustained?

(5) And the question that was propounded in the previous Report, and has not since diminished in importance, can be answered without hesitation in the affirmative: "Can the population of GREAT BRITAIN be sustained—at the rate of "emigration which is now going on, and which will probably be continued for "many years?" The thousands of emigrants that flock to Canada, to the United States of America, to Southern Africa, or to the wide lands of Australia, every year in increasing numbers, cannot exhaust the vast resources of these islands, but will rather extend, as they have done hitherto, the commerce, manufactures, and numbers of the nation from which they sprang, and from which they can never be divided in interest, language, or affection.

The actual numbers of the population can be sustained by a limited number of marriages.

Consequence.

(6) From the state of things which the Census discloses it is evident that the strength, the rate of increase, and the colonization now proceeding can be sustained by the marriages of only a part of the population; hence it follows, that if by any judicious means the increase of the incurably criminal, idle, insane, idiotic, or unhappily organized parts of the population can be without cruelty repressed, under a system of religious discipline, to a greater extent than it is at present by the selection that pervades, more or less, the whole system of English marriages,—the character and good qualities of the race will be immeasurably improved, without checking the tide of population or the increase of numbers. Hitherto the flower of the British youth have been in ignorance sent to the alluvial lands of the tropics, where our race cannot live, or where it inevitably degenerates; while, in defiance of the principles of physiology, and of the doctrines that are inculcated on the breeders of the inferior animals by the Royal Agricultural Society,—convicts have been thrown broadcast over some of the healthiest colonies in the world, and may now, without due precaution, multiply at home, like the forçats in France, and prove a leaven of social disorder and disorganization.

* Bacon's Essay—VIII. On Marriage and Single Life.

Effect of the age of marriage on the numbers of the people.

(7) The proportion of children to a marriage, and consequently the population, are regulated, not so much or so immediately by the numbers of the people who marry as by the age at which marriage is contracted. The mothers and fathers of nearly half of the children now born are under 30 years of age; and if all the women who attain the age of 30 should marry, and none should marry before that age is attained, the births would decline to about two thirds, and if the marriage age were postponed to 35 the births would fall to one third part of their present number: so the population would rapidly decline; firstly, because the number of births to each generation would grow less; and, secondly, because, as the interval between the births of successive generations would increase, and the duration of life by hypothesis remain the same, the numbers living contemporaneously, in other words, the population, would be further diminished. The age at which first marriages take place necessarily varies according to circumstances in different populations and in different classes of the same population; in the eldest and youngest sons of noble families; in the various rising or declining professions; among skilled artizans, and labourers.

Mean age at marriage in Great Britain.

The twenty-sixth year is the mean age at which men marry, and the twenty-fifth year the mean age at which women marry in England and Wales. About this period of life the growth of man is completed. Half of the husbands and of the wives are married at the years of age 21 and under 25; the higher average age is the result of later marriages; which occur in great numbers at the age of 25–30.

The disparity between the mean age of bachelors and of spinsters, about to marry, is one year in favour of the former; and the range of disparity seldom exceeds twenty years, and is, as it should be, almost always in favour of the husband.

Theoretical ages for marriage.

Plato laid it down that in his republic the men should be united about the age 30–55; the women at the age of 20–40. Aristotle, who possessed a greater knowledge of natural history than any author of antiquity, remarks that the young of very old or very young animals are imperfect, and that the children also of very young or very old people are imperfect in mind and body. He asserts, too, that people should, for reasons that he alleges, marry at such ages that when the wife is in her 50th the husband should be near his 70th year, or that men should marry about the age of thirty-seven, women about the age of *eighteen. In particular cases, as has been seen, to meet the infinite variety of social circumstances, greater disparities of age than these occur in Great Britain; but the rule of Aristotle, if acted on universally, would work mischievously in various ways. Thirty-three women attain the age of 18 to every twenty-eight men who attain the age of 37; and the women of the age of 18 and upwards are to the men of 37 and upwards as 1,402 to 804; so that a disproportionate number of the women would be unmarried. The proportion of widows would be increased, and fathers would less frequently live to see their children attain maturity. The object which Aristotle had in view is obtained by the remarriage of widowers.

Effects of fixing the age of majority.

The age of marriage cannot be directly fixed by laws; but legislation, by prescribing the minimum age of marriage, and the age of majority, does exercise a considerable influence on great numbers of the people directly, and on all indirectly. It becomes the custom or the fashion not to marry below the age of majority. Thus in England about 9,000 young persons of the age of 20 and under 21 married in the year 1851; while about 139,000 married in the four years after they were of age, as it is called, or in the years of age 21–25. The age of majority is twenty-five years in France; and the age of twenty-five divided the minores from the majores in Roman law. This advanced age of majority, or of what becomes practically the lowest age of marriage, retards marriage indefinitely in many cases, and will probably be found, on investigation, to account, at least partially, for the comparatively small number of children to a marriage in France.

By raising or depressing the age of majority the legislature then has the power to exercise considerable control over the population.

Distribution of orphans among small and childless families.

(8) The great number of childless parents, of unmarried persons, of orphans, and of large families, particularly among the poor, sanctions the practice of adoption; and points out the propriety of distributing destitute orphans and other children—who are now kept at great expense by parishes in workhouses, or by societies in large buildings—among the childless families, who would cherish the children with a sort of parental affection.

x. Bachelors, Husbands, and Widowers in the Army and Navy.

The regulations of the army set a limit to the marriages of men, but none to the marriages of officers. In the navy such regulations do not exist.

Married officers and men.

The proportions in the service who are returned as married in every 100 of each class, are 25 officers and 15 men in the army; 30 officers in the navy, and 24 seamen; while 2 officers in 100 and 1 man in 100 are widowers in the army, and 1 officer and 1 man in the navy.

Bachelors.

The proportion of bachelors in civil life is 31 in every 100 persons of the age of 20 and upwards. Among the officers of the age 20 and upwards serving in the army, 71 in 100—among the men, 82 in 100—among the officers in the Royal Navy, 60 in 100—among the seamen, 69 in 100—are returned as bachelors.

The officers of the army marry in much greater proportions than the men; so do the officers of the Royal Navy: but in the navy the disproportion is less considerable: and the proportion of officers and of men in the army who are married is less than the proportions in the same state in the Royal Navy.

In civil life, 62 in 100 men are living at the age of 20 and upwards in the state of marriage; so the numbers are much higher in proportion than the numbers in the army and navy.

The disproportion is the greatest in the earlier ages. Thus, at the age of 25–30 there are 54 married men to every 100 of that age in Great Britain; at the same ages there are to every 100 officers of the army only 15, and to every 100 men 15 married; to every 100 officers of the Royal Navy 20—to every 100 seamen nearly 26 married.

Number of wives of officers and soldiers.

It is probable that neither the army nor navy could, under these circumstances, keep up their numbers by marriage; but the country has other resources; and imposes the task of training and educating children during the period of service on only a limited proportion of its gallant defenders. Still, out of 6,593 officers of the army, 1,675 have wives, and out of 136,277 men at home and abroad 20,755 have wives; and it is right that some well-considered provision should be made for those 22,430 wives and for the 29,782 children of the brave men who fighting for their country live or die in her armies. The same claim holds on behalf of the wives of the officers and seamen in the Royal Navy, who, exclusive of the wives of marines, were returned at 6,151 in 1851; namely, 1,059 wives of officers and 5,092 wives of men.

These numbers apply to the Army and Royal Navy, not of Great Britain only, but of the United Kingdom.

xi. Population and Marriage in Scotland and in England.

Scotland differs from England in the numbers and in the density of population—in the rates of the people's increase—in the proportion of males and females—and in the proportion of men and women in the married state.

Thus in Scotland there are 110 females to every 100 males at home; in England and Wales only 104 females to 100 males at home.*

In Scotland 49 women in every 100 of the age of 20 and upwards are returned as wives; in England and Wales 59 women in every 100 of the same age are married.†

Scotland and England.

In Scotland the population has increased rapidly since 1801, and the increase in fifty years has been at the rate of 74 per cent.; but in England the increase in the same time has been 97 per cent.*

The population of Scotland was to the population of England as 18 to 100 in 1801; it is as 16 to 100 in 1851.

The density of population in Scotland is such in 1851 that on an average there are ninety-two persons to a square mile; while in England there are three hundred and seven persons to *a square mile.

The mean proximity of the people is such in Scotland that they are on an average 197 yards apart; in England the proximity is 108 yards.*

Seven per cent., or 207,367 of the inhabitants of Scotland, are natives of Ireland; while 519,959, or three per cent., of the inhabitants of England, are natives of Ireland.‡ The demand for labour has therefore been proportionally greater in Scotland than in England.

There are 130,087 natives of Scotland in England, or 7 in every 1,000 of the population of England; and 46,791 natives of England in Scotland, or 16 in every 1,000 of the population of Scotland. Scotland has sent 4·7 per cent. of its population to England; England and Wales 0·27 per cent. of its population to Scotland.‡

Scotland maintains 2,922,362 people on 20,047,462 acres of territory; England has 18,054,170 people living on 37,324,915 acres of territory.*

Allowing for the coldness of the northern climate, as well as for the necessary sterility of the hills, on the one hand, and, on the other, for the salubrity of the air, for the energy of the inhabitants, for the mineral wealth, for the adaptation of the country—covered by water-power in its mountain streams—to furnish healthy sites of manufactures and towns of various kinds, the conclusion appears to be inevitable, that Scotland is under-peopled; and that its resources have not yet been developed to the same extent as the resources of England. The smaller proportion of people living in the state of marriage in Scotland—one sixth less in proportion than in England—directly accounts for the retarded rate at which the population increases, and for the diminished proportion of the Scottish people to the people of England and to the land of Scotland. If we ascend a step higher in the inquiry, it appears to be probable that the peculiarity in the conjugal condition of the Scottish people is not natural, but is rather the result of its marriage law, which, as it was not reformed at the same time as the marriage law of England, produces results, not so extensive, but of the same nature and in the same direction, as the loose marriage law of England before it was placed on the present footing, in 1753, by Lord Hardwicke's Act, and by the new marriage law of 1837.

The Scottish marriage law.

The important evidence of Lord Brougham, Lord Campbell, and Dr. Lushington, in 1849, before a Committee of the House of Commons, consisting chiefly of Scottish members, supplies authentic information on the singular and almost incredible state of the Scottish law.

Marriage is held to be legally contracted in several ways in Scotland:— (1) by promise cum copulâ; (2) by contract per verba de præsenti; (3) by celebration before a clergyman, anywhere, after proclamation in the parish church; and (4) by celebration, as it is called in England, in facie ecclesiæ—the latter proceeding being rare; and (5) by "habit and repute."† The children who are born out of wedlock are legitimatized by the subsequent marriage of the parents in any of these forms. The maxim of the civil law, consensus non concubitus, faciat nuptias, implies that in this law, as well as in the law of England, the consensus is the essence of the contract; and consent is expressed most distinctly, and recorded most permanently in writing, before appointed officers and witnesses; but by the law of Scotland the concubitus in one form is a part of the contract, and is, as well as consent, to be proved. Lord Brougham says, speaking of marriage practically, "as the law now stands they [the parties] have "only to go before the ostler, or the chambermaid, or the postboy, whoever it "is that drives them to the country, or, if they reside in the country, they "can do it before ANY ONE WITNESS that can prove it, or, even without any "witness, they can do it if they can prove the date, by an interchange of letters "and acknowledgments; they have only to do that, and they are married in a "trice, and just as effectually as the Moderator of the General Assembly can "marry them, or any of the Doctors of Divinity in Scotland in his own parish." Under this state of the law, youths and girls, who have no power by the Scottish law to contract any other obligation of any importance, contract marriage without the knowledge of their friends; marriage is concealed, or its declaration is withheld; and the most delicate questions, affecting the honour of mothers, the legitimacy of children, and the transmission of property, turn upon nice, or difficult, or inaccessible, or indefinable proofs—not only of promise subsequente copulâ, but of the order of the two events that constitute marriage.‡

Various ways in which marriage is performed.

† See evidence, question 75, Parliamentary Paper 310, Session 1849.

‡ See the evidence passim, and particularly Lord Brougham's answer under question 32, where some of the technical terms are explained.

Marriage "by habit and repute."

The proof of a marriage "by habit and repute" is surrounded by difficulties: no Judge is able to say exactly what habit-and-repute is; but it has the popular pretension to be a sort of marriage by ballot, in which no one can discover for what the cautious man has voted.

Lord Brougham's opinion.

"I should say," Lord Brougham observes, "that the law of Scotland, as "it now stands, has a very great tendency to shelter, and therefore to promote, "clandestinity, which is, in my opinion, a very great evil in any society. It "seems to me to be of infinite importance that a contract, such as the marriage "contract, should be overt, and known to all mankind; and, above all, that it "should be easy of proof."*

Lord Campbell's opinion.

Lord Campbell's opinion is equally decisive, and to the same effect. He holds that it is "the duty of the Legislature to fix some open and certain mode in "which the contract is to be entered into, and a mode which may be easily "proved, so that women may know whether they are wives or concubines, and "children may know whether they are legitimate * * * * *." "It seems to "me," he adds, "that with respect to the marriage law of Scotland, at present, "although it has been perfectly well ascertained upon most points, yet from "the uncertainty of the fact it does not at all comply with these conditions; it "is secret; there is no certainty of proving it; and it leads, in my opinion, to "most disastrous consequences."*

Defects of the law of marriage.

Seduction and polygamy are greatly facilitated—concubinage is concealed by the appearance of marriage—under the law* of Scotland; and in the North of England the bargain, to live together, and to marry conditionally, is "very much "encouraged by the facility of going into Scotland and being married. The "degree in which that takes place in the border counties is incredible."†

Gretna Green.

English minors are legally married, without the consent of their guardians, in Scotland; and at Gretna Green, one important object of the English Marriage Act of 1753 is defeated. English parents of property are still afraid, Lord Brougham informs the Committee‡, to send their eldest sons to the University of Edinburgh, from the justifiable apprehension that they might succumb before the facilities of the law and the charms of the women of Scotland: against which the breasts of their youthful countrymen, alone, are steeled —by habit probably—as it does not frequently happen that Scottish heirs contract irregular marriages.

Such is the substance of the evidence of these eminent lawyers and statesmen; and their opinions are in entire accordance with those of their great countryman, Lord Mansfield, who in England supported the Marriage Bill of the last century by arguments that now lose none of their force or application in Scotland.§

Regular marriage.

Regular marriage is performed, we are informed, in Scotland, after proclamation in the parish church, more frequently than from the state of the law or from this evidence might be imagined. But proposals to make marriage in all cases an open, public, registered act, as it is in England, and as it is among all the other civilized races of Europe—or proposals to secure a complete registration of marriages in Scotland, without any interference with the religious rites—have hitherto been met by objections which the results of this inquiry into the conjugal condition of the people of Scotland may help to dissipate.

Defence of the marriage law of Scotland.

It has been said that the people of Scotland have hitherto had the right to contract marriage without any ceremony, any delay, or any display; that it would be "a hard thing" to deprive them of "vested rights;" that the registration of marriages would throw obstacles in the way of marriage; that it would be the cause of concubinage, and may lead to depopulation. The same objections were urged against the English Bill, but were falsified by the results. And upon closer examination it will probably be found that the educated classes in Scotland are, as Lord Campbell avers, a very virtuous people; but that in the minds of large numbers of the ignorant and rude population the importance is not perceived of a distinction so fine, so indistinct, so subtle, and so perplexing as that between the looser irregular marriages of Scotland—and no marriage at all. The belief consequently in the necessity or sanctity of marriage does not induce men and women to marry to the same extent as they would if marriages were in all cases publicly recorded.

Effects of loose law of marriage.

This was found to be the case in England before 1753. Children under the system of loose marriage are born in large numbers out of wedlock, and other results follow; but it is never found that the population increases so fast in a population containing a small, as it does in a population containing a large proportion of married pairs.

Probable effects of better laws.

Under the same securities, and with the same inducements, it is exceedingly probable that in Scotland matrimony will be held in the same repute and will prevail to the same extent as it does in England: which will place the population of the northern and of the southern portions of Great Britain again in a state of equilibrium,—raise the value of the land of Scotland,—and increase the number of the men of that nation who contribute in no small degree to the security, greatness, and renown of these islands.

xii. Influence of Changes in the Conjugal State of the People on their Increase.

Causes of the increase of population.

The cause of the recent rapid increase in the numbers of the British population, as shown in the Census reports, has been often discussed without any knowledge of the facts which in the present volume throw so much light, for the first time, on the state of marriage.

The causes of such increase are usually sought in certain happy mechanical inventions which have been made or brought into use within the period, and which now, as will be shortly shown, furnish employment to the population of large districts of the kingdom. These inventions, however, do not explain the whole of the facts; and they appear themselves to have been the result of a great, general, and simultaneous movement.

As the first Census was taken in 1801, no exact account of the population in the earlier periods can be obtained; but various estimates of the population were framed in those times by contemporary writers; and series of returns of baptisms and burials have been preserved in many parishes since 1571. After collating the various sources of information, the following estimates have been framed, which are founded on data that justify us in considering that they represent approximatively the population of Great Britain in the middle of each of three centuries.

	Estimated population of Great Britain and the Islands in the British Seas.	Increase of population in the Century.
1651	6,378,000
1851	21,185,000	13,793,000

Thus, according to the estimates, the people of these islands amounted to more than seven millions in 1751, and to more than twenty-one millions in 1851; they having increased nearly fourteen millions in the hundred years; while the increase of the numbers in the preceding century (1651–1751) was only one million: and the numbers can scarcely be wrong either way more than half a million.*

* See Davenant's Works, vol. ii. p. 175–185. Ed. 1771, and the Tables of Baptisms, Burials, and Marriages in the Census Reports, 1811; 1841. The facts on which the population of 1651 is estimated will be found in the Preface to

To what is the increase in the last 100 years due?

To what is this remarkable multiplication of population in the last hundred years, and its previous slow progress due? Is it a simple question of supply and demand? Is it something fortuitous, and entirely inexplicable? Is it the result of some simple change in the institution of families? or of some miraculous addition to the powers of the population? Undoubtedly several causes have concurred in the creation and sustentation of twenty-one millions of people on islands that have never before been the home of seven millions; and several of these causes, though subsidiary, have been powerful in their operation; but it is probable, from an examination of the facts, that a change in the marriage institution, and a great improvement in the character of the parents, have had the chief and most direct effect on the numbers of their children now living.

The decrease in the mortality.

The first evident cause of the increase of the population is a diminution of the mortality. A cessation of the great plagues which devastated England in the seventeenth century was followed in the eighteenth century by a diminution of disease. The towns were improved, and the habits of the people became more cleanly—their food more suitable and varied. Medicine advanced rapidly after the discovery of the circulation of the blood by Harvey, and of Sydenham's practical methods of treatment. Inoculation was tried, and Jenner's discovery of vaccination secured the life as well as the beauty of the women from the ravages of small-pox, which was fatal, in 1695, to Queen Mary. The plague of Marseilles excited in 1719 a salutary terror in England; and, among other useful sanatory publications, led to one of lasting importance by the great Dr. Mead.* The army, in the war of 1743–6, was followed to the Low Countries by Sir John Pringle, who successfully investigated the circumstances that affect the health of large bodies of troops on land; while Captain Cook, in his voyages, showed how sailors, who formerly could not be kept alive or in health for two months in the Channel, might, by proper provisions and judicious arrangements, be carried round the world in safety. These important new doctrines and striking examples led to the amelioration of the prisons and other public institutions. They had some influence, with the progress of the arts and sciences, on the municipal arrangements, and through them upon the health of the general population.

The increase of marriage and the improvement of manners.

The deaths first diminished proportionally; but it is to the increase of the marriages and of the births, as well as to improved manners, that we directly owe a large part of the accession of fourteen millions of people to the population of Great Britain, as will be rendered evident by an examination of the state of the population in the two periods; an examination necessarily cursory, and referring simply to the most salient and accessible facts illustrative of the influence of manners on the increase of numbers, without any pretension on our part, as moralists, to censure the manners of the former or to applaud the manners of the latter century. Such a state of the relations between the two sexes may be conceived as would, within certain limits, reduce or increase the number of births to almost any extent; and it will be shown that the time, the energies, and the earnings of the people, which had in 1651–1751 been wasted in intrigues, in riotous assemblies, on gin, and in gambling, were devoted in the next century (1751–1851), to the establishment and support of quiet industrious families.

the Enumeration Abstract, 1841, p. 36. By Mr. Rickman's estimate the population of England and Wales was 5,600,517 in 1630; after various corrections we find the population of that year to be 5,466,572, and the population of 1670 to be 5,090,045; we assume that the population of England and Wales was 5,466,572 in 1651, and add to this number a sixth part for the population of Scotland and the Islands in the British Seas.

* Seven editions of this eminent man's Discourse on Pestilential Contagion were printed in one year. It was written in 1720, at the instance of the Lords of the Regency.—Mead's Works, Memoir, p. x. Lind, Blane, Jackson, Price—pre-eminently—and others in various ways, contributed to the diffusion of sound sanatory principles in the eighteenth century.

The first period extends from 1651, the year of the battle of Worcester, to the year 1751, which, in the 24th year of the reign of George II., and three years after the conclusion of the peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, was signalized by the death of Frederick Prince of Wales,—and the death of Bolingbroke,—the great "Anti-Minister," as he was called by his rival; and—as evincing the result of the scientific progress of the country, under Newton's inspiration,—by a measure which Lord Chesterfield introduced for the reform of the calendar. The population increased very slowly; and we find that after the restoration of Charles II. such a general dissoluteness of manners was inaugurated as can now be scarcely understood, while shortly after 1751 the law of marriage—which, like the institution itself, had grown inconceivably loose, and had at the same time been greatly abused—was reformed. The Poet Laureate, in a great political poem, which, it is believed, was written at the suggestion of the King, about the year 1681, formally advocated polygamy, or something worse.* Many of the cavaliers had lost their estates in the Revolution; all incomes were precarious; and the young men, who naturally would not marry so long as they were living very much like the officers of an ill-paid army, contracted habits of gallantry, as they were politely called; so that the introduction of a court by Charles II. on the model of the French King's was not received with that repugnance which it would otherwise have inspired. The light poets, the players, and the gay men and women on town, led crowds of votaries into the extreme opposite to Puritanism. Young people of both sexes were brought from the country to Whitehall; where, instead of hard lessons of elevated thought and patriotism, such as Lady Jane Grey and her contemporaries learnt from Plato, they masqued, "ogled," sang, and danced† under the eye of the "mother of the maids," and the higher auspices of the Queen, the Queen Dowager, and the Duchess of York; until, wounded or terrified, they flew into concealment, or, as it was everywhere deemed, ridiculously married, and ingloriously discharged the duties of English wives and mothers. The sisters, daughters, and wives of the loyalest subjects, the greatest generals, the wisest statesmen, and the gravest judges, figured in the Paphian train; glittering and smiling as the troop of Boccaccio—in the pages of Grammont and on the walls of Hampton Court, but with advancing years shattered, patched, degraded, fading,—as they are seen in the authentic memoirs of the age and the life-like portraits of Hogarth. The court of William and Mary, after the Revolution, grew frigid; and vice lost its graces and charms. Queen Anne was "devout, chaste, and formal‡," in the words of a noble writer, who was unconscious of the inestimable value of these homely but not shining

* The first part of Dryden's poem—"the greatest satire of modern times"—"Absalom and Achitophel," which appeared in 1681, and was everywhere read and quoted, even "in discourses from the pulpit," opens with these lines, in which Charles II. figures under the character of David:

In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin,
Before POLYGAMY was made a sin;
When man on many multiplied his kind,
Ere one to one was cursedly confined;
When nature prompted, and no law denied
Promiscuous use of concubine and bride;

His vigorous warmth did variously impart
To wives and slaves; and, wide as his command, Scattered his Maker's image through the land.

qualities. A great revolution in the fashionable part of the kingdom followed the accession of George I., who had unfortunately left his wife in prison for a glaring impropriety, and brought over to England the fat Duchess of Kendal and the Countess of Darlington, who paraded their lives before the nation. The Prince and Princess of Wales "encouraged and promoted pleasures;" which, pent up before, now rushed forth with impetuosity, "and every door was willingly open to them." Queen Caroline, who was agreeable, learned, talented, and judicious in the distribution of the church patronage among the ablest clergymen, recognized, "favoured, and promoted the King's gallantries," which were never shared, however, by more than "two avowed mistresses of rank, the Countesses of Suffolk and Yarmouth." The dignities of the peerage in every reign of the period, except the interval under Queen Anne, were lavished on the Royal mistresses, by ministers whose lives threw into no reproving shade the majesty of the throne. If we exclude men of as little principle as Rochester, and of as strong passions as the good Lord Somers—who have their counterparts in all times—the lives of the whole race of statesmen, of lawyers, of literary men—of all classes of which records exist—show that the institution of marriage was unsettled to its foundations.

Manners in the reigns of George I. and George II.

Under this institution, in its natural state, the health, education, and fortune of their children, occupy the care and thought of two faithful parents; and successive generations are connected in families by indissoluble affections and associations: but under the loose, corrupt form of a state lower than polygamy that we here witness, the children are neglected, and perish; the intriguing mother is constantly preoccupied; the father knows them not, hates, or neglects them; so that the new generation is dissevered or entirely alienated from its ancestors; and the sons are not brothers, but envious rivals. Thus, after the death of Charles II.—by poison some suspected—his beloved son Monmouth was beheaded for rebellion by his brother James II.; who was himself driven into exile from a throne which his daughter and her husband filled. The bitter antipathy of George I. to the Prince of Wales, and the quarrels of George II. and his son Frederick—as well as the intrigues of the King's mistresses—filled the memoirs of the time, and occupied the attention of Parliament.*

Effects on families.

The enmities and fatal divisions in families were generally diffused; but were most conspicuous, and perhaps not the least prevalent, among the highest classes of society.

It is not true that "vice and folly generally in all countries begin at court;" but, with the encouragement which they found there in this century, they spread through the country extensively, and infected not only the middle classes but the artizans in towns. The plays, novels, poems, and memoirs, down to 1751, exhibit the licentiousness of opinion; and in licentiousness the practice seldom falls short of the profession, although in the latter part of the period the cant of atheism, libertinism, and conjugal infidelity was evidently often insincere. The law of marriage was in an unsatisfactory state; and the ceremony was so slight, various, and perplexing, in London, that it was often resorted to as a means of seduction.† A French writer thus describes the state of matrimony in England, in words which are substantially confirmed by Smollett and Tindal, and the speakers in the debates on Lord Hardwicke's Marriage Bill. "In England * * "a boy of 14 and a girl of 12 years of age may marry against the will of "parents or guardians, without any possibility of dissolving such marriages. * *

* See Lord Mahon's History, for a calm account of these painful transactions, without the colouring of Horace Walpole or Lord Hervey. We do not, however, see the truth of Lord Granville's dictum, which Mr. Macaulay and Lord Mahon have cited: "This family always has quarrelled, and always will quarrel, from generation to generation." Such family strife prevails in every private as well as royal house under similar circumstances; and with the cessation of those circumstances must itself ultimately cease.

Slow increase of population.

Although a large portion of the population suffered more or less from this state of things, a part remained unaffected; and a great improvement began, and became visible, about 1741; but in 1651–1751 the population of Great Britain only increased 16 per cent., or at the rate of 0·148 per cent. per annum, —the increase was one million and fourteen thousand in a hundred years.

Progress after 1751.

The effects of licentiousness had been felt, and the old generations had died out. The foreign wars furnished employment to large numbers. The house of Brunswick was firmly established on the throne by the final extinction of the Stuarts' pretensions in 1745. The Highland clans were conciliated by the wise policy of confidence, and the union with Scotland was cemented. The sciences, which Charles II. had encouraged in the Royal Society, were applied extensively to industrial purposes; and commercial integrity grew up under the influence of the public credit which Sir Robert Walpole had wisely fostered. The people grew more enlightened; and the many admirable works, by the clergy of the Church of England, by the Nonconformists, and by philosophers who looked at society purely from a temporal point of view †, began to produce sensible effects on public opinion, and on the manners of town and country. The Methodism which a man of genius preached among the poor was but one of the indications of increased spiritual activity, and of the importance which the lowest as well as the middle classes now attached to the regulation of the passions and to the excitement of the moral sentiments. One of the first evident reforms was in the law of marriage, which was placed on a greatly improved footing by a bill, which was carried, after arduous and able debates, by the influence of Lord Hardwicke.‡ The act came into operation

The English translation of this finely illustrated work appeared in 1737, and is said to be by an "Oxford Graduate." M. Picart, in his work on Religious Customs, treated marriage with very little respect; and the "Oxford Graduate," in a way quite characteristic of his age, appended in notes some of the basest and most profligate passages of Dryden's poems.

‡ Two of the debates in the House of Commons are reported, and in the ability which they display have rarely been equalled. The bill was introduced in the Lords, and was read a second time in the House of Commons on May 14th, 1753. On May 21st, 23d, 25th, 28th, 30th, 31st it was debated in Committee. The debates were long and violent, that of "the 28th having held till three o'clock next morning." In the debate on the third reading, Colonel Haldane, Charles Townshend, Mr. H. Fox, and Mr. W. Beckford spoke against the bill; Mr. Bond, the Earl of Hillsborough, and Solicitor General Murray, for the bill; which, after many amendments, passed by a majority of 125 to 56. Mr. Fox had himself married clandestinely the eldest daughter of the Duke of Richmond; so that there was much personal feeling as well as some resentment between the two houses in the discussion. Charles Townshend declared it "one of the most cruel enterprises against the fair sex that ever entered into the heart of man," and in 1754, and had for its avowed object the prevention of clandestine marriages, simply by making it necessary to the validity of a marriage without licence that it should take place after the proclamation of banns on three Sundays in the parish churches, before a person in orders, between single persons, consenting, of sound mind, and of the age of twenty-one years, or of the age of 14 in males and 12 in females with consent of parents or guardians, or without such consent in case of widowhood.* By the proposed alteration of the law, such scandalous "marriage shops" as Keith's, who it is said married 6,000 persons annually, would be closed.† Some time for deliberation would necessarily elapse between the determination to marry and the consummation of the marriage of the classes living on wages; and, finally, the sons and daughters of the wealthier classes could not, without the consent of their parents, until their judgment had attained some maturity, contract an irrevocable engagement. The marriage was to be entered in the parish register, and thus a strict line of demarcation be drawn between the married and the unmarried. The utility of the registration of marriages was admitted on both sides; but it was argued that the effect of the measure would be to throw all the wealth and power of the country into the hands of a few proud, wealthy families, who would compel their children, regardless of all other circumstances, to intermarry; and, furthermore, that by creating delay, expense, and publicity, it would "clog all matrimony in general," and stop the progress of population. The objections were answered at the time by several speakers; and Solicitor General Murray (afterwards Lord Mansfield), in a wise, luminous speech, vindicated the policy and principles of the bill from all attacks. Experience soon showed, that, instead of stopping marriage and the growth of population, the Act had the contrary effect by depriving the marriage ceremony of disgraceful associations—by making it, not a mere verbal promise, but a Life-contract, to be recorded, to be entered into with deliberation by persons in the enjoyment of their faculties, and to be kept inviolate until death.

Anticipated results of the new law.

Recent amendments of the law of marriage in England.

The marriage ceremony as it is performed in the Church of England embodies nearly everything that can be desired in connexion with this important social contract,—except a more complete registration than that now in operation; but as the dissenters could not concur in some of the religious doctrines of the Church, it seemed to be unjust to compel them to conform to its ritual in marriage; and the new Marriage Act of 1837 allows marriage, after notice to superintendent registrars in every district, either in the public Register Offices suspected some latent design in it "to secure all the heiresses of the kingdom to the eldest sons of noble and rich "families." Mr. Fox contended that "it would be of the most dangerous consequence to the female sex, of the most "dangerous consequence to our constitution; and, what is worst of all, it will endanger our very existence: for without "a continual supply of industrious and laborious poor no nation can long exist, which supply can be got only by "promoting marriage among such people. * * As the law now stands, a laborious couple may agree to be married "on the Saturday night, and, after a regular proclamation of banns, complete the marriage in nine or ten days; or, at "Christmas, Easter, or Whitsuntide, in four days." Mr. Nugent said that a public marriage was "against the genius "and nature of our people." * * "How fond our people are of private marriages, and of saving a little money, "we may be convinced by the multitude of marriages at Keith's chapel [in May Fair], compared with the number at "any parish church. I have made an inquiry, and I have been told that at Keith's chapel there have been 6,000 "married in a year; whereas at St. Anne's Church, which is a very populous parish, and a very convenient church "for private marriages by licence, there are seldom 50 marriages in a year; yet the difference in the expense is not "above 8*s.* or 10*s.*" "Mr. Fox," says Horace Walpole, "attacked the Chancellor violently on the Marriage Bill; "and when it was sent back to the Lords the Chancellor made the most outrageous invective on Fox that ever was "heard. But what offends still more was the Chancellor describing the chief persons who had opposed his bill in "the Commons, and giving the reasons why he excused them. As the Speaker was in the number of the excused, "the two maces are ready to come to blows."—Parl. History, vol. xv. pp. 1-86. H. Walpole's Letters, vol. iii. p. 2.

† Lord Mahon, and others of less authority, have assumed that 6,000 marriages were celebrated by Keith annually; but although this reading is suggested by the ambiguity of Nugent's speech, on whose authority the statement perhaps rests, the true reading is evidently 6,000 persons, which implies only 3,000 marriages. May Fair or the Fleet was the London Gretna Green of the age; but as only 3,985 marriages were registered in the year 1754, and 5,867 in 1756, in all the parishes of the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, it is not credible that Keith alone married more than 6,000 persons in 1752, although polygamy, and the practice of marrying many times, were, as stated in the debates common.—Parl. History, vol. xv., p. 19. Reg. Gen. 8th Report, 8vo. p. 50.

in the presence of the superintendent registrar and the registrar of marriages, or at registered places of worship.*

The number of marriages before the Act of 1753 is not known. Since the Act came into operation the registers of marriage have been preserved in England, and show an increase from 50,972, in the year 1756, to 63,310 in 1764. "The rage of marrying is very prevalent," writes Lord Chesterfield, in the latter year; and again, in 1767, "in short the matrimonial frenzy seems to rage at present, and is epidemical."† After many fluctuations, the marriages rose to seventy, eighty, ninety, and a hundred thousand annually, and in the Census year (1851) to a hundred and fifty-four thousand two hundred and six. Fourteen millions were added to the population. The increase of the population was 187 per cent., or at the rate of 1·06 per cent. annually.

Immediate increase of marriages, and subsequent increase of population.

That the state of manners had undergone great improvement in 1753 is evident from the healthy tone of the speeches in the marriage debate. Fox, who descended from the school of Walpole, indulged in violent but not in indecent language. Nugent, in an able speech against any alteration of the law, contrasts the conjugal state of England with that of France, and holds up to reprobation what England had before been invited by the party of the Restoration to imitate.‡ The great moralist of the century, who was not disposed to flatter on such a subject, "praised the ladies of the present age "(1776), insisting that they were more faithful to their husbands and more "virtuous in every respect than in former times, because their understandings "were better cultivated."§

Improvement in manners.

As every age has its Lucy Hutchinson or its Lady Rachel Russell, as well as its Castlemaine or its Lady Shrewsbury of the time of Charles the Second, it is not from singular instances that the manners of a people can be inferred, but rather, where facts cannot be defined in numbers, from the general tone of opinion: and the tide of public opinion now set strongly against licentiousness. Lady Yarmouth afforded "the last instance in our annals of a British Peerage bestowed "upon a royal mistress," a noble writer is able to pronounce, with evident and justifiable satisfaction.‖ Frederick Prince of Wales, who married the young Princess of Saxe-Gotha, in 1736, or towards the close of the previous period, "adored his wife," Mr. Macaulay remarks, "and thought her mind and "person the most attractive of her sex. But he thought that conjugal fidelity "was an unprincely virtue, and, in order to be like Henry the Fourth and the "Regent Orleans, he affected a libertinism for which he had no taste, and "frequently quitted the only woman whom he loved for ugly and disagreeable

* All marriages at churches are now registered; and marriages are performed, as before, after banns or licence. Under this licence, marriage can be celebrated in less than twenty-four hours. The dissenters have to pay 3*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.* for a licence, to wait at least seven days, and to submit to the publication of their intentions once before a Board of Guardians.

We have not thought it necessary to transcribe the motives to which the noble writer ascribes the "frenzy;" but the prediction with which he accompanies the announcement to his son is characteristic of the manners of the preceding period, in which his opinions were formed:—"The "rage of marrying is very prevalent; so that there will be probably a great crop of cuckolds next winter, who are at "present only cocus en herbe. It will contribute to population, and so far must be allowed to be a public benefit."

‡ "In France," said Nugent, in the debate, "one of their noblesse must not marry a roturière. What is the con-"sequence? " mistresses."* Others, like the Prince, were not misled by passion, but by custom and opinion. The state of opinion changed so much and so completely, that in 1763 the Earl of Sandwich, a minister not known before for his puritanism, but as a participator in the orgies of Medmenham Abbey, denounced the Essay on Woman by Wilkes, in the House of Lords, with a view of holding up the author of a libellous number, Forty-five, of the North Briton, to public odium. The House of Lords passed a resolution declaring the essay " a most scan- " dalous, obscene, and impious libel."†

Court of George III.

It is to the conduct of two young princesses, the Princess [Frederick] of Wales, whose abilities Sir Robert Walpole at once perceived, and Queen Charlotte, that the great change in public opinion and manners is in no slight degree to be referred. They represented and they promoted the change of manners. After the death of Prince Frederick, his son George, imperfectly educated in literature, was carefully brought up at Leicester House, so that Lord Waldegrave, by no means friendly to the Prince's mother, says that the young Prince of Wales was " of a modest, sober disposition, with a healthy vigorous constitution." A year after he ascended the throne as George III., in 1760, at the age of 23, under the advice of his mother, he married Charlotte of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz, who attained the age of 17 in that year.‡ Of the political course of George III. and Queen Charlotte, opinions necessarily still differ; but the truth of the testimony to the Queen's private virtues will be universally admitted: —" Pure and above all reproach in her own domestic " life, she knew how to enforce at her Court the virtues, or, at the very least, " the semblance of the virtues, which she practised. To no other woman, " probably, had the cause of good morals in England ever owed so deep an " obligation."§ The Queen devoted much time to the education of her family. The simple, pure life of the Royal Family, soon became known in every cottage of England and Scotland, and afforded a striking contrast to the scandals of preceding reigns. In his "Idea of a patriot King" an English political writer who frequented Leicester House—after he had himself exhausted the cup of pleasure—pleaded with an eloquence that has never been surpassed the importance in a prince of a virtuous private life, and showed that a good king should begin by being a good man. At least, he intimated, decorum should reign around him, as it did around Augustus and the court of Louis XIV.‖ Decorum reigned in the court of George III.; but it was not the result of calculation or of philosophy, but of the love of order, of duty, and of religion. This Prince as zealously promoted the family, as an institution, according to the old Anglo-Saxon type ¶, as Charles II. propagated the oriental fashion,

This letter is dated Dec. 1, 1738, two years after the marriage of Frederick Prince of Wales, and three years after William Pitt (Chatham) entered Parliament. The influence of Bolingbroke's political writings, which in eloquence have never been surpassed in any language, has not been sufficiently appreciated.

or its spurious modification. Of this, among other proofs, was the Royal Marriage Act, which he suggested; the troubles in the Royal Family, which arose chiefly on conjugal questions; and his constant opposition to ministers of shining talents, but of manners less strict than his own; or to whose advice, influence, or seductive example he ascribed the dissipation of the princes of his family.* Neither the bitter war of faction—the gravest errors of policy, such as the substitution of a favorite Groom of the Stole for a great and popular minister, in critical times—the greatest disasters, such as the loss of the provinces of America—the anarchical excitement of the French Revolution—nor an affliction the most pitiable that can cloud the human faculties—shook the throne of the King; because, as if by some admirable instinct, the people of England felt that he had faithfully discharged all the duties which every head of an English family is bound to perform, and had thus contributed to the establishment of principles that are the sure foundation of the nation's happiness and greatness. He was to the last the "good King," whom they had pitied and blamed, but never hated; for he had placed the wife on the throne which the mistress had usurped: so that the idea of the English family lived again in all its old beauty. And this was a great social reform, which deservedly preceded all other changes.

Edueation of families.

The social reform of the family was also promoted, to an extent which the history of the eighteenth century alone can explain, by the great minister who filled it with his fame. Lord Chatham, then William Pitt, in the first year of the new Act (1754), married Lady Hester Grenville†, a lady, not only of great accomplishments, but of exquisite disposition, who devoted herself to her duties with fidelity, sagacity, and success. Chatham himself, when his health permitted it, never suffered, it is said, a day to pass without giving instruction of some sort to his children, and seldom without reading a chapter in the Bible with them.‡ On his monument his wife inscribed, with a truth which all his correspondence supports, the happiness of their "family life." His second son was educated at home from the age of six to fourteen, and profited so much in the society and by the instruction of Chatham, in eloquence and in wisdom, that he became the Leader of the House of Commons and Prime Minister of this kingdom at the age of twenty-four, and filled that office, with but a short interruption, until his death in 1806.§ He inherited at least so much of his father's greatness that he was not oppressed by his glory. He never married; but the enemies of his policy allow that his private life was not stained by improprieties. "He was not sent to a public school, like Mr. Fox," observes a living statesman, "nor was he taken by his parents to a foreign gambling table, "and initiated early" [as Fox was by his father] "in the vices of a profligate "age. He was educated at home, and with such regard to economy that when "he was sent to Cambridge we find that one of his earliest calculations referred "to the comparative cost of keeping his horse at grass or in the stable."‖

Education.

The children of many other families were apparently educated about the same period at home, to withdraw them from the corrupting opinions and manners which prevailed in the public schools, and had been handed down from the previous generation in uninterrupted succession.*

Charles Fox and the repeal of the Marriage Act.

Charles Fox, who was as precocious as William Pitt, and had many of the great qualities which ensure the possession of power in England, proposed the abrogation of Lord Hardwicke's Marriage Act in 1772. He went out of office under Lord North, apparently to oppose the Royal Marriage Bill. The course of his private life brought down on his head, while he was still in office under Lord North, the displeasure of George III.; which was sanctioned afterwards by the censure of national opinion. His genius, his tenderness, his eloquence, and his love of liberty, however, softened and threw some splendour over the vices, which descended in a turbid stream from the previous times†; and which afterwards, in the Regency as well as in the reign of George IV., bursting again from the narrow bounds in which they had been confined, threatened to overflow society: but a reaction took place; conjugal vices were persecuted, and no longer met with applause or indulgence, in king or poet, under the crown or under the laurel. English literature, in the pages of Shakespeare, Spenser, and Milton, had offered nothing but creations of purity and dignity in women,—such as are to be found in the literature of no other nation,—and recovered its inheritance in Addison, Goldsmith, and Johnson,—in Walter Scott,—and in the subsequent writers, whether poets, dramatists, or novelists, who deal with manners.

Purity of English literature.

It cannot be pretended that the conjugal relations or the manners of the present age are perfect, if we look at the interests of the great number of children who are still unfortunately born out of wedlock,—at the facts which are revealed before the Courts of Law,—or at other facts, equally notorious, which will probably figure in the pages of chroniclers as envious and malignant as Lord Hervey and Horace Walpole. But improvements in manners, neither recorded nor easily expressed in figures, unquestionably distinguish this century.

We have seen and traced two numerous classes of the population, like great rivers flowing through two centuries; the one has dwindled away, although it still exists, without beauty on its sterile banks; the other has grown wider and deeper every year, and now sheds abundance over the land.

Immediate connexion of manners and population.

By modifications of the conjugal condition of the population the numbers may either be diminished by celibacy and licentiousness, or be multiplied by marriage. And in conformity with this principle, it is found that the change in the conjugal condition of the nation, which has unquestionably taken place since 1651 and since 1751, has been followed by great changes in the population, and in the rates of its increase.

* See Cowper's admirable satire "Tirocinium," particularly the paragraph commencing "Would you your son should be a sot or dunce,

"Lascivious, headstrong, or all these at once,"——&c. &c.

† Charles Fox was born on January 24, 1749, and was returned for Midhurst to Parliament in 1768, where his extraordinary talents were immediately recognized. He was the third son of Henry Fox, then Lord Holland, who had married, clandestinely, Lady Caroline, the eldest daughter of the Duke of Richmond; and Charles, by a sort of generous resentment, immediately assailed a bill which had been always distasteful to his father. Fox was, according to the accounts of the time, "dissolute, dissipated, idle beyond measure, but a prodigious genius." He arrived on the morning that he proposed, in 1772, the repeal of the Marriage Act, from Newmarket, where he had lost "some thousand pounds the preceding day," and in 1773-74 was deeply involved in pecuniary embarrassments. He was not then twenty-five years of age. His debts amounted to 140,000*l.*, which, it is said, were wholly discharged out of his father's estate. This punishment of the father had an almost judicial character. In his speech against the Marriage Act young Fox said, "the two great points of the 'Marriage' Bill were to fix the notoriety of marriages, and to "prevent improper marriages, by establishing a nullity. He approved the first; he highly condemned the second. "To encourage marriages by facilities was the business of a republican kind of government; but the late bill had been "the work of a proud aristocracy, and he believed had hurt propagation, though he was not ready with proof that "it had."—Memorials, vol. i. p. 83. Burke made, it is said, a fine oration against the bill; which was rejected by 93 to 34. Fox again introduced a bill having the same object in view, in 1781; and notes of Burke's speech in opposition, which is able and philosophical, are printed in his works, vol. 2, pp. 496–8. Ed. 1842.

The increase of marriages and of population in the century after 1751 was followed by more than a corresponding increase in the strength and in the external as well as internal action of the kingdom. William III. introduced Dutch troops into England at the Revolution; and, notwithstanding the power that England had displayed abroad under Cromwell, it became the practice in the eighteenth century to subsidize foreign troops. In 1745 Dutch auxiliaries were brought over to defend England against the inroad of the Highland clans under Charles Edward. At so late a date as the year 1755, subsidies were advanced to Russia and to Hesse-Cassel for troops. The kingdom was threatened in 1756 with invasion; and a message from the king was brought down to both Houses of Parliament by Mr. H. Fox, who showed that both the liberties and the "religion" of the Commons and Peers and people were in imminent danger.

Deplorable depression of the English population down to 1741-51.

The English people had somewhat declined in numbers from the peace of Utrecht down to 1740; and their courage appears also to have fallen under a pusillanimous minister to the lowest ebb; for Mr. Fox, on March 23d, 1756, in the House of Commons, moved, that, "for the more effectual defence of this "island and for the better security of the religion and liberties of His Majesty's "subjects against the threatened attack by a foreign enemy, he would be "graciously pleased to order twelve battalions of his electoral troops, together "with the usual detachment of artillery, to be forthwith brought into this "kingdom." Mr. Pitt dared to declare that England could defend itself; but the motion was carried and concurred in unanimously by the House of Lords, In the course of the next month the Hanoverians and the subsidized Hessians arrived in England, and "encamped in different parts of the kingdom."* Mr. Pitt entered the ministry, evoked the national valour, and soon proved that under a great minister a population of seven or of nine millions could not only defend these islands, but conquer the northern provinces of America and the southern provinces of India. Hessians, and even Indians, were, however, afterwards hired and disastrously employed by Lord North in the American war: enormous armies were also subsidized in the last continental war; but the rapid growth of the population subsequently, and its present condition, justify us in repeating with increased confidence now the words which Lord Chatham uttered in the 18th century:—"My Lords, we shall not want men "in a good cause."

Subsidized mercenaries defend the country.

The increase of people after 1751 supplied colonists to the British Possessions in America:† Halifax was founded in 1751, and many people went to settle in Nova Scotia; Georgia was peopled; the population of the other American states rapidly increased before, and still faster after, the war of independence: armies of peaceful emigrants from the United Kingdom every year crossed the Atlantic in increasing numbers to swell the States' Census.

Colonization.

Another great result of the increase of well-constituted families was the increase of the industry of Great Britain. The manufacture of iron by wood charcoal in England rapidly declined, until at length, in the year 1740, the produce fell to 17,350 tons. Coal was tried, and after that time was successfully used for smelting; so that in the year 1788 the produce was seventy thousand tons, in the year 1800 a hundred and eighty thousand tons, and in 1851 two million five hundred thousand tons.‡ Iron and steel tools have thus been placed in the hands of the workmen and labourers of the country; arms in the hands of the Army and Navy.

Progress of agriculture.

Agriculture, the old secular occupation of the English people, advanced rapidly after 1751. Lord Townshend,—of whom, in a corrupt age, it was well said, that "never minister had cleaner hands,"—after he had withdrawn from the ministry of Walpole, ardently prosecuted agriculture in Norfolk, and introduced the turnip culture, which was followed by so many important results, from Germany.

Many of the landed proprietors who were neither ignorant squires nor Jacobites had, nevertheless, wasted their time in intrigues, drowned their senses in drink, or squandered their estates in gambling; but after 1751 great numbers of them devoted intelligence and capital to the improvement of their estates. They encouraged societies of agriculture. The farmers adopted new processes. The increased produce of the farm was improved in quality; commons were enclosed; marshes were drained; machinery was introduced. The breeds of cattle, sheep, and horses, were sensibly improved; and an impulse was thus given to the cultivation of the finest part of agricultural science, which is intimately related to the science of population, and will in the end throw much light on its principles.

Canals and Roads.

Canals were required for the transport of fuel, goods, and produce; and were carried out in a patriotic as well as a commercial spirit by the Duke of Bridgwater; who, with the aid of Brindley's genius, triumphed over engineering difficulties that had been held insuperable. The roads were subsequently improved.

The Duke of Buckingham (1670) and the Duke of Bridgwater (1770).

A noble duke—the Duke of Buckingham, who wrote licentious poems—intrigued—gambled—shot the Earl of Shrewsbury in a duel, while the Countess, it is said, held his horse—was the genius of 1670. In 1770 the Duke of Bridgwater, who to accomplish his great plans had, at one time, reduced his personal expenses within 400*l.* a year, borrowed small sums from the farmers of Cheshire, and never quailed in difficulties—was an equally good representative of his order and of the class of large landed proprietors.

Manufactures. New machines invented.

But the whole of the new population could not be employed in mines, in canals, or in agriculture—in the production of fuel or of food for mankind. Other wants existed; other occupations had to be created. And it happened, as it always will happen in this nation, that as the millions of additional people grew up to manhood, inventors were found, in the lowest as well as the highest ranks, to discover new machines for their use in new employments; and also men, in all classes of life, of perhaps still rarer qualities, who could organize the people, lead them out to new enterprizes, and employ them profitably in the Old as well as in the New World.

The force of steam was placed at man's disposal by James Watt. All these machines—of which the exquisitely regulated, incessant, and accurate movements cannot be contemplated without admiration—and others of little less ingenuity, in the hands of the inventors, and of the Peels, Marshalls, Strutts, Greigs, Ashtons, and masters scarcely less famous, produced a thousand different wares, yielding in value millions sterling yearly, and so offering occupation and subsistence to the population.*

population in direct and easy communication not only with each other in Great Britain, but with the rest of the world.

The Abstracts of occupations which follow show how largely, how actively, and on what a variety of objects, the twenty-one millions of people in Great Britain are employed. Various occupations.

With all that we now see around us, it is difficult to place ourselves in the position of the people of 1751; and to understand either the simplicity of the means, or the greatness of the task which has since been achieved by the people of England and Scotland. It is evident, however, that if the whole that they have accomplished had been proposed as a project, or been held out as the policy of the greatest minister then living, its difficulty and grandeur would have overwhelmed him with confusion. If in the height of power he had thus addressed the people of Britain, would he not have been heard with justifiable incredulity?—"These islands and Ireland are occupied by the men "of many separate states that are now happily united. After the settlement "on the land of tribes, fleets, and armies of Celts, of Saxons, of Danes, and "of Normans—and after centuries of patient culture, its fertile soil sustains "seven millions of people in its whole length from the Isle of Wight to "the Shetland Islands. "All this shall be accomplished without any miraculous agency, by the "progress of society,—by the diffusion of knowledge and morals,—by improve- "ments,—and improvements chiefly in the institution of marriage—' that true "source of human offspring,' whence, Extraordinary progress by simple means.

Although this policy was never distinctly propounded to the nation, it was carried out with greater success than usually crowns great undertakings; for it was adopted by the heads of families of the middle as well as the working classes, and received the sanction of the intellect always—and often of the practice—of the most enlightened and leading and eminent men. And fourteen millions of people were thus created and established in Great Britain.

The increase of the population in the hundred years was favoured by a variety of admirable inventions and physical incidents; but it was intrinsically the result of ameliorations in the public health, of increased commercial integrity—and of the development of a great moral principle in the minds of the men and women—the fathers and mothers—of this nation. Moral agency.

xiii. "The Principle of Population."

The policy which England, since 1751, has pursued in respect to population, was directly condemned and opposed by an acute and diligent critic; who Criticism of the policy of progress.

endeavoured to establish a new doctrine, and to deduce, from what he designated "the principle of population," some of the most adverse inferences. His doctrine has held such sway for some years in the works of political economists, and has such a direct reference to practice, that we shall notice two or three of its fundamental propositions.

Malthus.

Thomas Robert Malthus was born in 1766 at the Rookery in Surrey, amidst a poor and healthy but not a very intelligent agricultural population. His father, an accomplished speculative man, was one of the executors of Jean Jacques Rousseau; and placed young Malthus under the tuition of Mr. Graves, the author of the Spiritual Quixote, and of Gilbert Wakefield. After proceeding to Cambridge in 1784, Malthus became a Fellow of Jesus College in 1797, under the conditions of celibacy which still linger as traces of the monastic system in our universities.* In consequence, apparently, of a friendly controversy with his father, he wrote and published the first edition of his "Essay on Population," in 1798; chiefly with a view to combat the doctrines of Condorcet and Godwin, who held that the human race was perfectible, and was advancing towards a standard of ideal perfection. His paradox was at direct issue with theirs, as the "principle of population" rendered vice and misery, he contended, inevitable in all ages.

Conflicting paradoxes.

Population, we know, cannot increase indefinitely; its limit is as absolute as the limits of the world, or of the matter of which the world is composed; and in Great Britain the rate of increase is retarded by the premature mortality, the vice, the postponement of marriages, and the celibacy of the inhabitants. But Malthus went further in his doctrine; he insisted that the increase of mankind is the chief source of misery, and that extensive abstinence from marriage, or the repression of population, is to be regarded as the fundamental condition of human happiness. Population, he argued, is necessarily limited by the means of subsistence; but population increases naturally in a geometrical progression, or as 1, 2, 4, 8,..... while subsistence cannot increase at a faster ratio in the same time than is expressed by the arithmetical progression 1, 2, 3, 4.....; consequently population is checked, and the checks which repress the superior power of population, and keep it on a level with the means of subsistence, are all resolvable into moral restraint [celibacy], vice [licentiousness], and misery [famines, plagues, disease]. Such was in short his doctrine. The ranks of this army—the population of every country—are full; the supply of the commissariat is limited; therefore, the number of annual recruits remaining invariable, any decrease of the deaths in battle must be followed by an equivalent increase in the deaths by famine and fever; or if the deaths from all causes are to decrease, the number of annual recruits must be diminished. Jenner had recently discovered an antidote to the poison of small-pox. It was declared immediately to be no benefit to mankind. "I feel not the slightest "doubt," says Malthus, "that if the introduction of the cow-pox should "extirpate the small-pox, and yet the NUMBER OF MARRIAGES CONTINUE THE SAME, "we shall find a very perceptible difference in the increased mortality of some "other diseases." And again: "The operation of the preventive check—wars— "the silent though certain destruction of life in large towns and manufactories— "and the close habitations and insufficient food of many of the poor—prevent "population from outrunning the means of subsistence; and, if I may use an "expression which certainly at first appears strange, supersede the NECESSITY "of GREAT and RAVAGING EPIDEMICS to DESTROY WHAT IS REDUNDANT. " What prevents the population of hares and rabbits from overstocking

One of the corollaries from the doctrine was a plan for the gradual abolition of the poor laws, by declaring that no child born from any marriage taking place after a given date "should ever be entitled to parish " assistance."

All that is peculiar in this doctrine, all that is erroneous, and all that has shocked the public opinion of the country, ever since its enunciation, flows from a flagrant oversight; which might be pardoned in a young, hasty controversialist, but should assuredly have been at once taken into account when it was discovered in the light of Sir James Steuart's original analytical work that Sir James Steuart. had been first published in 1767.‡ Malthusianism had, however, become a sect; had been persecuted; and was modified and softened, but still upheld by its disciples.

Sir James Steuart, who wrote before Adam Smith, lays down the fundamental principle of Malthus, but limits it by a preceding overruling proposition. (1.) We find, he says, the productions of all countries, generally speaking, in proportion to the number of their inhabitants; and (2.), on the other hand [as Malthus asserts], the inhabitants are most commonly in proportion to the food. Steuart then shows that the food of the world may be divided into two Analysis of subsistence. portions: (A.) the natural produce of the earth; and (B.) the portion which is created by human industry. (A.) corresponds to the food of animals, and is the limit to the number of savages. (B.) is the product of industry, and increases (all other things being equal) in proportion to the numbers of civilized men. The whole of the chapter on Population in Steuart's work should be consulted. Malthus, it will be observed, loses sight of this analysis, and throughout his work confounds the yield of the untilled earth with the produce of human industry; which increases at least as rapidly as the numbers of civilized men, and will increase until the resources of science are exhausted and the world is peopled.

The population that a country sustains does not depend exclusively on the Subsistence is produced, and varies in amount with the character of the producers. amount of subsistence existing at any one time. The produce of a country is limited chiefly by the character of the inhabitants. For if, as an example, twenty-one millions of men from any part of Europe were put in the place of the people of Great Britain after harvest, the various produce would not be maintained in succeeding years; and in the hands of Caffres, of American Indians, or of the wretched inhabitants of Terra del Fuego, however great the stock of subsistence may be at the beginning of a ten years' occupation of these fertile islands, it is evident that, at the end, both the subsistence and the people would vary with their industry, but would decline, and be, comparatively to the actual produce, inconsiderable in amount. Future generations of Britons, if they have genius, science, skill, and industry — and if they are more numerous — will necessarily produce more than the country now yields.

It does not follow, as the theory of Malthus assumes, that a diminution of the number of the people in 1800 or in any other year would have had for its result the division of a larger share of subsistence among the survivors; for in that year a failure of the crops was followed by a severe famine, although the number of families to be fed was not by one-half so many as the number at present in these islands. And, conversely, the share of each person's produce is not diminished as the population increases; for the share of the produce of every kind that falls to a family in the most populous state of America is incomparably greater than the share of the Indian hunter's family when there was not one person to every square mile of territory.

Real limits of the population.

In the rudest state, where men live on fish, or fruit, or game, the population is rarely limited by the amount of subsistence existing, but directly by the skill, industry, and courage of the savage; for any improvement in the use of the net, hook, bow, spear, or weapon is followed by an increase of the tribe; while any diminution of its courage or industry is followed by extermination or decay. In the pastoral or in the civilized state, the same causes, operating on a larger scale, produce effects still more striking.

The character of every race of men is the real limit to its numbers in the world, if allowance be made for accidents of position and time.

Population not redundant.

Population is often out of the place where it is wanted, or could be most productive; but the population of the world is not, as Malthus assumes, redundant; and not only is there a paucity of men of transcendent genius in all countries, but few persons, who have occasion to undertake or who accomplish great industrial, political, warlike, or other operations, ever find that the men of skill, industry, and entire trustworthiness—of whom they can dispose, either in the highest or the lowest departments—are super-abundant. Every master knows that good men—and every man that good masters—are scarce.

The idle, unskilful, and criminal.

The idle who will not work, the unskilful who cannot work, and the criminal classes who cannot be trusted, are, however, it may be admitted, whether numerous or few, always redundant. But as the disciples of Malthus, if there were "two millions of such people in Great Britain," would not hear the public executioner invoked for their destruction, neither can we admit the validity of the argument of that writer when he attempts to reconcile us to the loss of lives by shipwrecks, explosions, small-pox, close habitations on low sites, —by the ignorance of men, the fevers of towns, or the blind fury of pestilences,— which are fatal to all classes of the nation. New births may repair the numbers, but never fill the places of the dead.

The assumption that subsistence increases at a rate corresponding to any arithmetical progression rests on no authentic observations. The produce of this country has never been valued at stated intervals. Capital, however, increases, it is always assumed, when terms of years are considered, in a geometrical progression; and at compound interest the increase is much more rapid than the increase of population in any European state. The interest of money, indicating the annual increase of value, is the produce of property, and bears a rather close analogy to the increase "of the means of "subsistence." At 3 per cent. per annum compound interest the value of capital is doubled in 24 years; and a population increasing at 3 per cent., which is near the natural rate, doubles in the same time; while actually the British population has increased at the rate of 1·329 per cent. annually for the fifty years 1801–51; and has doubled in 53 years. Thus—if we take this indication—the means of subsistence have increased faster than the numbers of the people; for while the population has doubled, the value of capital under investment at 3 per cent. compound interest has quadrupled.* The PRODUCE of Great Britain, which in the present state of commerce is always con- vertible into the "means of subsistence," has probably not increased at a lower ratio; and no one can pretend, in the absence of the exact facts, that the ratio has been arithmetical.

The assertion falls to the ground, that the disappearance of small-pox, of cholera, or of other epidemics, must be followed immediately by famine, or by an increase of other diseases. The principle may hold of "rabbits," and of animals that have no power of creating subsistence; but its application to civilized men is absurd.

Possible consequences of adopting the theory of Malthus.

If the reasoning of Malthus had been just, and the people of Great Britain had acquiesced in its conclusions, the ravages of disease might have gone on undisturbed, and such numbers have remained in a state of celibacy or of libertinage that the population of Great Britain would not now have exceeded seven millions. Such a course might indeed have been pursued without the sanction of his doctrine. To secure a fuller share of the means of subsistence and luxury, every man might have converted his property into a life annuity, and have expended his income on personal enjoyments. The life of licentiousness, selfishness, and extravagance which was introduced into England by Charles II. was lived by the court and nobles of France down to the outbreak of the first French revolution. Such a course was pursued on a grand scale by the Romans under Augustus, and ever afterwards until the destruction of the empire,—as prevailed in what was once called the Augustan age of England.* Happily the people of Great Britain after 1751 embraced totally different principles.

Happier consequences of the policy actually pursued.

The United Kingdom is now covered by twenty-eight millions of people; and has thrown out towards the west a long line of colonies, and independent states, that speak her language, that preserve the purity of the English family, that have lost none of the courage or industry of their race—but furnish this country with supplies of food, as well as with the materials of manufactures, in exchange for wrought produce. And now it is no subject of regret that, instead of counting on the strength of seven or of nine millions of people, or of having to resort, under a threat of invasion, to Holland, Hesse-Cassel, or any foreign state for troops—the Queen of this kingdom,—who embodies the virtues on which the strength of her people is founded,—can send mighty fleets and armies to the seas and shores of her enemies, for the defence of civilization against the Power that has, during the same century, organized and placed arms in the hands of sixty millions, including nearly all the barbarians that wander over the north of Asia and of Europe.

There is nothing, therefore, in the past or in the present conjugal condition of the population to inspire any apprehension of a redundancy or a scarcity of population in Great Britain; but a great deal to encourage the policy of further improvement in this condition—in the training of the young, in the circumstances in which children are born and families live; so that the British race, growing better and greater, may increase in numbers at home, and continue to send out every year thousands of new families to the colonies.

A comparison of the excess of Baptisms over Burials in 1801–1810 shows that the excess of Baptisms over Burials must be raised nearly one third part for the births of children who are not baptized to make it equal to the increase of population. Proceeding backwards in this manner from 1791 to 1741, the probable increase of population is obtained for every 10 years; and by referring to the probably deficient registration of baptisms in the earlier period the series is carried back to 1701.

The method which has been here employed of making the estimate appears, upon the whole, to be better than that of assuming any constant relation to subsist between the population and the marriages, births, and deaths. The estimates that have been made by others differ somewhat from these for the first forty years; but the excess of Burials over the Baptisms in the same parishes during the three years 1710, 1720, 1730 appears to show conclusively that the population decreased in that period. The means for estimating the population of Scotland and of the Channel Islands by the same method do not exist; but the population of the whole of England and Wales is to that of Great Britain nearly as 6 to 7, and the population of Great Britain may be obtained approximately from that of England and Wales by raising the latter one-sixth part.

§ 3. OCCUPATIONS OF THE PEOPLE.

Occupations.

On a subject of so much interest as the Occupations of the people of this country, and the changes which have taken place in their employments, any information that is the result of actual returns deserves attention. Consequently, although the inquiries into occupations in the earlier Censuses were incomplete, and by no means discriminatory, we shall present a rapid summary of their chief results; which will admit, if due care be applied, of some useful comparisons with the results of the present inquiry.

i. The Nature of the Inquiries into the Occupations at the Censuses of 1801, 1811, 1821, 1831, 1841.

1801. Persons in three classes of occupations.

An attempt was made in 1801 to obtain an account of the Occupations of Persons in Great Britain under three heads.

The result was published in the subjoined form for England and Wales, and Scotland; the population of the Islands in the British Seas was first enumerated in 1821.

Cols. 1, 2, and 3 are given in the Tables (pp. 497, 547) of Enumeration Abstract, 1801. Cols. 4, 5, and 6 are here added.

Army, navy, and seamen, 1801.

Besides the numbers in this table, there were 198,351 men in the army and militia, 126,279 in the navy, and 144,558 seamen in the registered shipping of the United Kingdom. The statements are taken from the Enumeration volume of 1801. For the corrected numbers, and an estimate of the numbers belonging to Great Britain, see the First Census Report, 1851, vol. i. p. xxiii.

1801. Returns imperfect.

In the preface to the Enumeration Abstract of 1831, it is said that in 1801 the females, children, and servants were sometimes returned by the householder with himself; that in some cases he returned them in the negative class, as being neither agricultural nor commercial; and that in other cases he omitted them entirely. Thus, it is added, the failure of the question became manifest, and the "worthless answers" were entered without attempt at correction.*

Occupations of families, 1811, 1821, 1831.

The question concerning Occupation or Employment, as amended in the Population Acts of 1811, 1821, and 1831, inquires what number of families [not of persons] are chiefly employed in or maintained by agriculture? How many by trade, manufacture, or handicraft? And how many families are not comprised in either of these classes? The following results were obtained:

Families and population, 1801, 1811, 1821, 1831.

The total families and population returned at the four Censuses were:

Families employed in agriculture.

From 1821 to 1831 families chiefly employed in trade, manufacture, and handicraft increased, but at a slower rate than they had in the previous ten years. The families returned by the overseers as chiefly employed in agriculture declined from 847,957 in 1821 to 834,543 in 1831.

Other families.

The residue, or all other families, increased from 485,491 in 1821 to 849,717. It is evident, therefore, that although the Returns in 1831 had been made by the same class of officers—the overseers—and were replies to the same inquiries, the principle of classification had been changed.

Families in three classes.

Mr. Rickman has discussed the causes of this change in the preface to the Population Abstract, 1831.* The comparative distribution of families, he says, stands thus, in centesimal parts:

		Agriculture.	Trade, &c.	Others.	Total.
Great Britain	1811	35	44	21	100
	1821	33	46	21	100
	1831	28	42	30	100

It was ascertained that in 1831—

Explanation of the returns of 1831 by Mr. Rickman.

no less than 608,712 labourers were then employed otherwise than in agriculture (that is, as miners, or fishermen, in inland navigation and road-making), or otherwise than in trade or Manufacture, although employed in the conveyance of commodities and in other essential services to the tradesman and manufacturer.

The change arose by operating on these classes; which do not appear, at first view, to have any immediate connection with agriculture.

Mr. Rickman goes on to remark,—

The explanation of this in the following manner requires attentive perusal:—The overseer in England, who knew that many industrious labourers in his parish were employed in mines, or in road-making, and otherwise, during the larger portion of the twelvemonth, but were occasionally employed in harvest, or in the cultivation of their own gardens, was heretofore induced to class these as agricultural, rather than in the column which seemed to denote idleness, or no employment at all; but when (as in 1831) a distinct column was assigned to useful labour of whatever kind, he placed them in it, and having so classed them, he could not consistently class their families in the agricultural column, which was thereby lessened in amount, and the seemingly non-productive column of families proportionally increased. The schoolmaster in Scotland did the same with respect to miners, and to a larger extent as regarding fishermen, an employment which seldom being constant throughout the twelvemonth tended especially to create this kind of discrepancy from the former classification of families; as indeed several of the schoolmasters explain distinctly in their observations appended to the returned schedules.*

Mr. Rickman goes on to say,—

A more particular description of occupations was thought to be desirable and practicable in 1831; and it was recommended to the Committee of the House of Commons to ask the occupation or employment of every male twenty years of age; not only because he is then usually settled in his vocation, but because the number of males under twenty years of age, and the number upwards of twenty years of age, was found to have been so equal in the enumeration of 1821 that any considerable deviation from that obvious proportion was likely to induce further inquiry, and correction in every case suspected of error. * * * * * * *

The new classification of males upwards of twenty years of age fills an entire page throughout the two Enumeration volumes. The agricultural class is now distributed into three columns; viz., the families of OCCUPIERS of LAND who employ labourers are in number 144,600; of occupiers who do not employ labourers, 130,500; and of agricultural labourers, 686,000; the first two of these distinctions being deemed more generally illustrative of the grade and condition of those under whose care the soil is cultivated than the number of acres occupied or the amount of rental. * * *

* Preface to Population Returns, 1831, pp. ix–xiii.

1831. 7th Instruction.

The farmers were, according to this arrangement, 275,100; the labourers 686,000, or 29 and 71 per cent. respectively of the males upwards of twenty years old employed in agriculture, including,— graziers, cowkeepers, shepherds, and other farm servants, gardeners (not taxed or taxable as male servants), and nurserymen.

The following instruction was added,—*

In answering this question you will carefully distinguish those males into three classes: viz.—

First, Occupiers of land who constantly employ and pay one or more than one labourer or farm servant in husbandry.

Secondly, Occupiers of land who employ no labourer other than of their own family.

Farmers' sons and widows.

Agreeably to this instruction, the class of farmers' sons working at home with their parents would not be returned as employed in agriculture at all, unless they were returned as labourers. To what extent overseers classed them here, or among other labourers, it is now impossible to say. The widows and other women, and minors, occupying farms, do not appear in the return; so that the number is less than the number of farms in the country. The following Tables show the general results of the inquiry.

The 277,017 persons returned under the head of army, navy, marines, and seamen in registered vessels, do not figure in the arrangement, although about 199,245 of them belong to Great Britain.

Manufacture, question 8.

No definition of "manufacture or manufacturing machinery" is given; but labourers in warehouses, porters, messengers, &c. were to be excluded from the class, and to be referred to Class 7.

Trade, Handicraft, question 9.

(Class 5.) The next question addressed to the overseer was,—

How many males upwards of 20 years old are employed in retail trade or in handicraft, as masters, shopmen, journeymen, apprentices, or in any capacity requiring skill in the business; but not including labourers, porters, messengers, &c.?*

A list of the denomination of a hundred trades was transmitted with blank spaces, for entry of the answers; it being understood that if any trade or business were omitted in the printed list it should be specified at the bottom of such list.

Question 10.

(Class 6.) The "wholesale merchants, bankers, capitalists, professional persons, artists, architects, teachers, clerks, surveyors, and other educated men," were to be returned under this class. It was an instruction that generally "persons maintaining themselves otherwise than by manufacture, trade, or bodily labour" were to be included in the class.

Question 11

(Class 7.) Miners, fishermen, boatmen, excavators of canals, road-makers, toll collectors, or labourers employed by persons of the three preceding classes [4, 5, 6], or otherwise employed in labour not agricultural, constituted the seventh class.

Class 8 included—

Question 12.

Other males of twenty years of age (not taxable servants), including, therefore, retired tradesmen, superannuated labourers, and males diseased or disabled in body or mind.

Question 13.

The last question referred to "household servants, including male servants,"

* Preface to Population Returns, 1831, pp. xiii., vi.

1831. Question 13.

[all, taxable or not taxable,] "waiters and attendants at inns." The overseers were told, as a general rule, "always to assign an individual of mixed occupa- "tion or income to that by which he is supposed to profit more than by any "other."

Such were the instructions and general results of the inquiry into occupations in 1831.

Occupation of persons and families in 1831.

It will be observed that there was a double return of occupations:—1. A Return of FAMILIES according to Occupation, in Three Classes. 2. A Return of MALES OF the AGE of 20 and upwards, in Nine Classes; of male servants under 20, and female servants of all ages; and the inquiry into the class of trade and handicraft was extended so as to include every branch.

"In truth," Mr. Rickman remarks, "the similar questions as to families and to individuals were "simultaneously asked in 1831, with an expectation that hereafter the question as to INDIVIDUALS "might (by application of the rule of proportion to the 1831 returns) supersede any future ques- "tion as to FAMILIES, the preliminary objection to which has been already stated, and the "comparative result is here proved to have been defective in accuracy from unforeseen causes."†

The publication for 1831 showed the numbers in each class for—

Great Britain, England, Wales, Scotland, Counties, Hundreds, Parishes (and Townships in several cases). *

The males twenty years of age employed in retail trade or in handicraft, as masters or workmen, were returned in counties. (See Table 27. for an example.)

1841. Occupations.

The third volume of the Account of 1841 contains an alphabetical arrangement of all the occupations carried on by the inhabitants of Great Britain, of whatever age or sex, on the 7th of June 1841, from the personal communication of each individual or head of a family. There are separate returns (distinguishing the sex, and whether above or under 20 years of age,) for every county of Great Britain and for the large towns, and these are afterwards combined for England and Wales, for Scotland, and for Great Britain generally.

The enumerator was directed to insert each man's description of himself. The result was, that many occupations were returned that will not be found in the list of 1831, while in the instance of important manufactures minute subdivisions of labour were separately entered in the schedules. In the county of Lancaster alone the total number of different terms (all of which were finally transferred to cotton manufacture) were 1,255. For the woollen manufacture of the West Riding of Yorkshire 117 different subdivisions of labour were returned. The complete list of 1841 contained 877 distinct lines of figures.*

The Commissioners make no return of families. They, however, institute a comparison between "the two great classes of occupations, viz., agricultural " and commercial (or trade and manufacture).† In the former are included all " farmers, graziers, nurserymen, &c., together with the whole number of persons returned as agricultural labourers; in the latter, all shopkeepers and manufacturers, with those working under them; while from both classes are excluded those returned as domestic servants or general labourers, together with all professional persons. The two classes in each county are compared in a table. The general result, the Commissioners state, is, that "the agricultural " class in England and Wales forms not quite 8 per cent. of the whole popula- " tion, while trade and manufacture employ 16½ per cent."‡ * * * a The chief difference between this total and that published in the Census Report for 1851 arises from the army of Ireland here included, being left out of the more correct statement in the Report of 1851.

In their general classification the Commissioners joined manufacture, commerce, and trade together, as they felt great difficulty in making such a division satisfactorily.* Occupations, 1841.

The above (Table 29.) was only a part of their classification, which comprised 12 great classes, two of which were subdivided, embracing 7,846,569 persons, leaving the large residue of 10,997,865 unclassified.† (See Table 30.)

ii. The Abstracts of the Occupations of the People, 1851.

We have now to consider the Occupations of the People in 1851. Occupations, 1851.

This branch of the abstracts has occupied a large portion of the labour of the Central Office. It was considered important to extend the inquiry, so as to show, as nearly as was practicable, the number of men, women, and children in every trade or profession; and to obviate some of the difficulties which had interfered with the previous inquiries, short instructions on important points were printed upon every householder's schedule; and instructions still more elaborate were distributed among the enumerators and registrars.‡ The result has been a great improvement in the quality of the information under this head; although it is still imperfect, as the inquiry is attended with inherent difficulties, which can only be removed by special measures, to which we shall shortly advert. Improvement in the quality of the information.

If the names are taken by which people designate their own occupations, it is found that they amount to several thousands; that, in some instances, the same name is applied to different occupations; that various names are applied to the same occupations in different counties; and that the occupations in town and country, in manufacturing and other districts, are subdivided to a greater or less extent. Several of the names are vague and of doubtful interpretation. Nomenclature.

It was held to be desirable, not only to take out the numbers of persons of each sex in each occupation, but the numbers at each quinquennial period of age; for without this information the relative salubrity of the professions, and a great variety of important questions, cannot be determined. But the mechanical difficulties of the undertaking were great. It would be, and was felt to be, a vain expenditure of time to attempt to compress the numbers returned under each occupation and each age in one table for each district; so upon observing that certain occupations were followed by few persons, the printed list of males for use in abstraction was reduced to 332 occupations, on lines which were vertically cut by lines to indicate the quinquennial ages. The facts respecting the occupations of males were in the analysis laid down on sheets 26 inches long by 40 inches wide; and the ages of those whose occupations were not in the large list were written in printed supplementary sheets for subsequent transcription. To have ensured perfect accuracy in all the details, the whole of the abstracts of the occupations should have been repeated in duplicate and compared; but with the force at our disposal, this could not have been achieved in the prescribed time. Considerable pains were taken to correct evident errors of nomenclature; to instruct, assist, and check the abstractors in their work; so that, notwithstanding the difficulties in the way, we look with confidence on all the general results of their labours. The occupations which were referred to "Others" in the several sub-classes, and which appear in detail only in the large Table (54), are the least satisfactory part of the abstracts; but those which appear in the original abstract tables, comprising the occupations in which large numbers are engaged, are published in detail for each county and district; and in the large tables 53, 54. pp. cxxi–cxlix. they are People of various Occupations in Quinquennial Periods of Age.

printed in capital letters; as they are, on the whole, the most accurate and important in this kind of classification. The tabulation was elaborate, and employed much skill and careful attention.

Distribution of all the chief occupations shown in districts over the country.

It is important, in a Census of the people, to show not only the numbers that follow each occupation, but their distribution over the country; and this, it will be seen, is done for counties, for districts, and for all the large towns of the country. To this circumstance chiefly the voluminousness of the publication is referable; and it must be borne in mind that the Census is a topographical as well as a national survey; and that, as far as is practicable, it is desirable to supply the inhabitant of each district with that information in which he is most particularly interested: hence, in the first Report, it was deemed right to publish the area and population of each of the several thousands of parishes and townships in Great Britain; and in the present Tables, besides the county returns, the occupations of the males and females of the age of 20 years and upwards in each district appear in detail.

iii. Distribution of the People in various Occupations over the Country.—Map.

Simple occupations of the early stages of society.

In the early stages of society the occupations are so simple, that whole tribes have been designated hunters, shepherds, agriculturists, according as the members live by the produce of the chase, on the produce of their flocks, or on the produce of the cultivated land. There is in such cases but one chief occupation; and the subsidiary occupations are few, employing comparatively small numbers.

Multiplied occupations of the present day.

How different, and how much more complicated, the social organization of the people of Great Britain is in the present day, the great variety of occupations in the tables shows.

Map exhibiting a large number of the occupations:

To render this evident to the eye, and to give a general notion of the distribution of employments over the face of the country, we requested Mr. Petermann to construct a Map from the tabular data with which he was supplied.

Agricultural population:

The general tint of the map, as will be seen on opening it, is green—to indicate the diffusion over the country of agricultural population; comprising the land proprietors, the farmers, the graziers, and the various classes of workmen, either in or out of doors; watching the flocks on the hill pastures, managing the herds in the meadows, working with the horses the arable fields, or labouring in the various buildings for carrying on the multifarious processes of production, which are now branches of agriculture.

Shipping population. Fishermen.

The figures of ships and fishes around the coasts, or in every creek, show that another large class of the population surrounds the hundred and seventy-five inhabited islands of Great Britain, and is constantly employed in drawing sustenance from the rivers and the deep waters of the sea; or in constructing, animating, and directing ships that connect the islands and the continents of the earth, and are at once the carriages and the highways of the ocean. The Celt on the hills, the Anglo-Saxon in his farm-house, and the Scandinavian in his ship—all find suitable occupations. They are diffused over sea and land. Mr. Petermann has conceived a great variety of quaint, ingenious, and suggestive devices, which are scattered in profusion over the map, to represent the people that are engaged in works, crafts, mines, and manufactures; and the first, and we believe, a true, impression, on glancing over the symbols of the map—so crowded in certain parts that marginal references are necessary—undoubtedly is, that the British people are very ingenious, and very industrious; as there is scarcely a mineral, a plant, or an animal on the earth or under the earth, that they have not undertaken to move, to modify, or to make subservient to some use.

General diffusion of the occupations of towns.

Besides agriculturists, fishermen, and seamen, the trades common to towns are as widely diffused as the towns themselves; which are sufficiently indicated by the maps in the previous Report. The present map shows only the places where certain well-defined works and manufactures are concentrated. Thus ships are made at Woolwich. In London silk is manufactured; watches are constructed; ale and porter are brewed; pottery, and engines and machines are made in a large way: gardens surround it for the supply of vegetables; on both sides of the Thames, paper is manufactured. Straw-plait, lace, and shoes employ the people in the South-Midland counties; the silk manufacture extends to Bucks, to Suffolk, to Norfolk—particularly around Norwich—to Coventry, Nottingham, and Macclesfield, with the districts surrounding the towns. Silk now employs hands in Manchester and Bradford. Glovers abound about Yeovil, Barnstaple, Worcester, and Woodstock. Thus the seats of the principal manufactures can be traced on the map: the miners and the manufacturers of the principal metals; quarriers; the people spinning and weaving wool, silk, cotton, and flax; the manufacturers or makers of hats, stockings, gloves, shoes, watches and clocks, guns, engines, machines, tools, ships, chemicals, soap, combs, skins, leather, ale, toys, straw-plait, ropes, nets, thread, paper, glass, jewellery, locks, buttons, wire, nails, anchors, boilers, files, cutlery, needles and pins.

Occupations that are indicated in the Map.

iv. Masters in Trades, and Men in their Employ.

Masters and men.

A Census in the most extended sense, and as it has been understood in some countries, embraces an enumeration of the visible property and of the annual produce; it includes, therefore, industrial and agricultural Statistics. The present Census was restricted by the Act to an enumeration of the population, and of certain circumstances illustrative of their condition and occupations. No attempt could therefore be made to enumerate the number of manufactories, shops, or separate properties in the country; but in connexion with occupation it was thought desirable to distinguish masters from men, and for this purpose to ask the masters in trade and manufacture to so distinguish themselves by writing "master" after the names of their respective occupations, and by adding the number of men on the Census day in their employ. Farmers who are masters of a particular occupation were requested to state how many acres of land they occupied, and how many labourers they employed, with a view of giving a definite idea of the term "farmer," and of laying the foundation of a further inquiry. A list has been made of the names of the farmers resident in every parish or township of England and Wales on the Census night, with the number of acres and the number of labourers that they returned.

The 129,002 Masters in England and Wales in 1851 employed 727,468 men, or on an average 5·6 men to each Master. Of the 129,002 Masters, 41,732 employed no Men, or made no return of the number of men in their employ, but simply stated that they were "Masters." The 87,270 Masters, each of whom employed 1 man or more had on an average 8·3 men each.

Nominal list of farmer

This information can evidently only be made perfectly accurate by a careful and laborious revision on the spot; but, in the absence of this revision, the returns furnish information of so much interest on a matter so imperfectly understood, that it has been thought proper to construct tables showing the size of farms in each county, together with the number of labourers that were employed. The Divisional and County Tables of farms, farm labourers, and masters will be found in their place after the Abstracts of Occupations.

Masters and men.

The return of the masters in trades is imperfect; all the masters have not so returned themselves; and it can only be rendered complete in the event of the Census being extended to an Inquiry into the Industry of the Country. But several interesting results are perceptible in Table 31: 87,270 masters in England and Wales state that they had in their employ 727,468 men, or $8\frac{1}{3}$ men each on an average. 378,127, or more than half of the number of men were employed by masters who had 30 or more men in their employ; more than a fourth part, or 202,500, were employed by 752 masters who had each 150 or more of them engaged on that day.

Many persons, who have no men in their employ, work on their own account in a small way, and call themselves masters. To this head 41,732 masters in the return apparently belong; which includes, however, probably a certain number of masters who employ men, but did not state their numbers. The masters in various occupations, and the number of men in their employ, are shown in the Summary Tables, Table xxx, page cclxxvi.

v. Farmers and Labourers, and the Size of Farms.

Farmers and labourers. Table 32. p. lxxix.

The farmers, who are also masters, or who returned themselves as actually occupying land in England and Wales, amounted to 225,318, of whom 133,620 had 665,651 labourers in their employ on the Census day; 40,650 farmers, employing 5 or more labourers, had two-thirds of the agricultural labourers, or 467,709 labourers in their employ; 16,501 farmers, each having 10 or more, employed 311,707 of the labourers.

Farmers by profession, and persons who now actually occupy land.

Some uncertainty prevails as to whether the farmers returned all their in-door farm servants; and women and boys were included in some cases and not in others. To obtain the total number of persons who are employed on the farm, the farmer himself must be added, and frequently the farmer's sons at home. The General Tables should be referred to in connexion with this subject; and it should be borne in mind that many of the agricultural labourers by profession are out of employment, and are disabled; that many of the farmers by profession are superannuated, or have given up their farms—as the rule in the general abstracts has been in all cases to refer the retired tradesman or professional man to his profession, although he is only an ineffective member.

Farmers who employ no labourers.

91,698 persons in the return called themselves farmers who had apparently no labourers; many of them probably doing the manual labour themselves, and others with the assistanee of their children, while others employed labourers part of the year; and some may have had labourers that they did not return.

It is certain, however, that in parts of the country, men who employ no workmen and have only a few acres of land, have always been called and returned at the Censuses as "Farmers." Farmers who employ no labourers.

The tables showing at one view the number of labourers in the employ, and the number of acres in the occupation, of each farmer are exceedingly interesting, and the form may be employed with advantage in dealing with the agricultural statistics of the country. The return of the workpeople by masters and farmers,—by farmers of the acres in their occupation,—is purely tentative, and a mere auxiliary to our inquiry. A Table is however added (see Table 34. next page) of the estimated amount of land actually occupied by farmers, and an equally interesting Table (33.) throwing a good deal of light on the size of farms. Tables of farmers, and of labourers in their employ.

Thus by this table there are 285,936 farms in Great Britain, of the average size of 102 acres; in England and Wales the farms amount to 225,318, or 111 acres on an average; in Scotland 56,650 farms have an average size of 74 acres. The average English farm, it will be seen, differs little in size from the Hyde of the Anglo-Saxons; which according to some estimates contained 100, according to others 120 acres.† Half of the territory of Great Britain (0·507), two-thirds of the English territory (0·667), and one-fifth part of Scotland (0·209) are thus asserted to be occupied as farms. The rest remains unaccounted for; and the greater part of it is probably hill, moor, marsh, or other less fertile ground; as well as water and land now entirely sterile. The hill pastures, according to the instruction, are not included in the farms to which they are attached. Number of farms returned. Size of farms.

Two-thirds of the farms in Great Britain are of a size under 100 acres: or, taking the exact proportions, in a thousand farms 672 are under 100 acres; 187

In addition to the number of Acres farmed in Scotland, there are 1,662,491 Acres of Pasture or Moor Land, making in all a total of 5,851,069 Acres under cultivation of some kind. A considerable addition may also be made to the number of Acres farmed in England and Wales, on the assumption that many of the Farmers did not return the acreage of Pasture or Moor Land held by them in addition to the number of Acres actually farmed. Mr. M'Culloch, in his Statistical Account of the British Empire (4th Edition, vol. I. pp. 549 and 564), estimates the number of Acres in cultivation, including Pasture and Wood Lands, to be in England and Wales, 29,800,000 Acres, and in Scotland, 7,543,450; he sets down 13,900,550 as the number of Acres not cultivated in Scotland, exclusive of Lakes.

* In addition to the 223,271 Farms, there are 2,047 from which no return of Acreage has been received, and which will make the total number of Farms in England and Wales 225,318.—The Table may be read thus: 27,695 Farmers hold Farms of 50 and of less than 75 acres, covering in the aggregate 1,730,938 acres; and 125,471 Farmers hold Farms of 50 acres and upwards, covering in the aggregate 22,537,501 acres.

are 638 under 100 aeres ; 205 of 100 and under 200 acres ; 154 of 200 and under 1,000 acres ; and 3 of 1,000 aeres and upwards. In Seotland there is at once a great excess of small and of large holdings. There are 360 farms in Scotland, and 771 farms in England, of 1,000 acres and upwards. There are 142,358 farms in England, and 44,469 farms in Seotland, eaeh of whieh is under 100 aeres. In England and Wales the large holdings abound in the south-eastern counties and in the eastern counties : the small farms in the north-midland counties, in Yorkshire, in Wales, and in the north-western counties, eomprising Lancashire and Cheshire. Nearly all the farms (947 in 1,000) in the Islands of the British Seas are small, if farms under 100 acres can be so designated. The number of farms of various degrees of magnitude is shown with greater partieularity in the preceding Table (see p. lxxx, Table 35) ; where it is seen that the 97,800 farms of less than 50 acres eaeh comprise 2,141,990 acres of the land of England ; that 44,558 farms of (50–100) aeres, eomprise 3,206,451 acres ; that 45,752 farms of (100–200) aeres eomprise 6,555,600 acres ; that 30,047 farms of (200–500) aeres comprise 8,821,100 acres ; and that farms of 500 acres and upwards comprise 3,954,350 acres of the 24,679,491 aeres of farmed land in the eountry. There are nearly as many acres (2,152,050) in the hands of 2,038 English farmers having farms of 700 aeres and upwards, as there are acres (2,141,990) in the oceupation of 97,800 small farmers : so that whcn agrieultural statisties are obtained, the comparative results of farming in the large and small way will be evident. Size of Farms.

The size of the farms in Seotland and in the Divisions of England is shown in the Tables *; and in the appropriate plaee of the subsequent pages the size of the farms in each separate county will be found.

vi. On Nomenclature and on the Classification of People by Occupations.

The organization of the labour of the country may be considered in reference to the occupations ; or the people may be classified in groups, easily distinguishable, on the principles that have been adopted sinee the time of Linnæus in the natural sciences. Great value would undoubtedly attaeh to an analysis of the existing organization of labour ; under which the people, armed with capital, tools, and maehines, earry on an endless variety of proeesses —for the eonversion of the materials of the animal, vegetable, and mineral kingdoms—into an infinite variety of products. But a preliminary provisional elassifieation is indispensable before the inquiry ean be eommenced : and the occupations must be defined, and an uniform nomenelature be adopted at the outset. Organization of abour.

Our classification was framed at an early stage of the work, before either the analysis in question was undertaken or the nomenelature scttled. And now, immediately that the final Tables are eompleted, we proceed to publish them,—without entering into their analysis,—without attempting to deduee from them the numerous important results which they will be found to yield,—and without attempting more than to point out to the reader the principal groups of the people—as they come under notice—in the several elasses. The new classification.

The original elassifieation has been preserved through the long series of Tables ; and in the LARGE TABLE of the OCCUPATIONS OF THE PEOPLE IN GREAT BRITAIN (p. exxviii) a few occupations only have been transferred from one elass or sub-elass to another ; while the greater part of the occupations (those of 467,655 in 476,866 persons) whieh in the series of Tables are placed in their respeetive sub-elasses simply as "Others," are here considerably expanded, and designated by their proper names.

The length of the list has been curtailed within its present limits by referring the names of the different elasses of workpeople in the branches of manufaetures to one head, sueh as pin-maker, needle-maker, cotton manufacture, and silk manufacture; for it is assumed that the subdivision of occupations will be separately investigated at a future time.

Double occupations.

The double occupations are as great a source of difficulty as the varying degrees of the subdivision of labour in the manufacturing and other districts. The same person is a member of parliament, a magistrate, a landed proprietor, and an occupier of land; in a lower circle, an innkeeper and a farmer; a maltster and a brewer; a fisherman in the season, a farmer or a labourer in the rest of the year. The enumerators were instructed to this effect, that "a person "following more than one distinct trade may insert his occupations in the "order of their importance;" and in the classification the first occupation was generally taken.

The whole population had to be passed in review, and every man had to be referred to some one head, although his time might be passed in two occupations; but if a class thus sometimes obtains more constituents than it deserves, it on the other hand often sustains counterbalancing losses.

Arrangements have been made on the working sheets by which a further analysis of the double occupations can be carried out; and an example of their utility will be found at page cclxxxv, in respect to the other occupations of the farmers or the occupiers of the land. 22,982 occupiers of land returned themselves as engaged in other pursuits besides farming; 3,434 as inn or beershop keepers; 1,885 as millers; 1,463 as gardeners or nurserymen; 1,230 as land proprietors.

Other occupations of farmers.

The prosecution of a further inquiry.

With the knowledge that has now been acquired, a further inquiry may, we think, be instituted with advantage into the industry of the country in all its ramifications; a nomenclature be laid down; the various subdivisions of labour be defined; and the classification be finally revised, so that at the next Census the foundation may be laid of a complete knowledge of the organization of the labour of Great Britain. Such an inquiry would in many ways be useful; and tend at once to extend science, to promote production, and to dissipate subversive theories.

Alphabetical arrangement of occupations.

For ready reference all the occupations are arranged alphabetically in Table 53 *, containing, besides the number of males and of females under 20 years of age, and of 20 years of age and upwards, distinct references showing in what class and sub-class of the classified tables each occupation is to be found.

An inquirer can easily construct from this table a classification of his own for any particular purpose, as the number of persons in all the principal occupations is distinguished.

It would be out of place here to insert a disquisition on the principles of classification; to attempt to show the impracticable nature or the imperfections of other classifications; and to vindicate in all its details the arrangement that has been adopted. But this arrangement possesses one advantage that should not be overlooked: it is not a mere arrangement on paper such as that of the people into producers, distributors, and consumers; but an arrangement in which it has been found practicable to find a place for every one of the twenty-one millions of people in Great Britain, and in which we can pass them rapidly and distinctly in review.

Important advantage of the arrangement adopted.

vii. The New Classification of the People in their several Occupations.

Characteristic costumes.

In the present day costume is not in extensive use to distinguish one class of people from another. The soldier, the seaman, the policeman, the beadle, the footman, the butcher, the turncock, have peculiar dresses; the peer, the judge, the barrister, the clergyman, and the alderman assume costumes in discharging the particular duties of their offices: but few people in trades are now easily distinguishable by the colours or qualities of their clothing.

Characteristics of occupations.

If the people are looked at, however, in their several occupations, striking differences will be immediately perceived: (1) in the skill, talent, or intelligence that is exercised; (2) in the tools, instruments, machinery, and structures that are used; (3) in the materials that are worked; (4) in the processes of making or manufacturing; and (5) in the products that are created. All these elements and their conflicting claims have been considered in the classification; but, in conformity with the first notions of mankind of which we have record, the greatest weight has been given to the materials in which people work, as they generally imply important modifications not only in the tools, in the machines, in the processes, and in the products, but in the characters of the men. By his trade, and by the matter which surrounds him, how different is the blacksmith from the tailor; the shoemaker from the hairdresser; the butcher from the baker; the horsedealer from the grocer; the sweep from the navvy; the fisherman, the waggoner, the pedlar, and the cotton-spinner, from each other!

Those who work, and those who have no definite occupation.

The first and most obvious distribution of the population is into the two great groups of (1) those who work, and of those (2) who professedly have no definite occupation. After a due correction has been made for the persons who are infirm or who have retired in advanced age from their trades or professions, the number of the latter class in this country will not be found to be numerous.

Those who are engaged in definite occupations are arranged in fourteen distinct classes.

First Class. Her Majesty the Queen. The Royal Family. The Lords and Commons. Civil Servants. Officers of local government.

At the head of the First Class stands Her Majesty the Queen. The Prince Consort and the rest of the Royal Family are placed next to the Queen. The two Houses of the Legislature follow: then the Civil Servants of the Crown; and the chiefs and the subordinate officers who are employed in the local government and works of counties, boroughs, unions, districts, and parishes.

This class is divided into three sub-classes; and it may be remarked that they all present considerable difficulties, as many of the most eminent men fill various offices. The members of the Executive Government are legislators; members of the House of Commons are often large land proprietors, barristers, officers in the army or navy, merchants, or manufacturers; and the aldermen, town councillors, guardians, and many of the officers that carry on the local government of the country are almost always engaged in trades and professions, from which their income is derived. This class can therefore only be completely investigated by the further inquiry into secondary occupations to which reference has been made.

Sub-class 1: Government.

Its place, however, it is right to preserve here; for the government of men is the most important occupation in which men engage, and that which exercises the most powerful influence on the happiness and destiny of nations. 71,191 men of the age of 20 and upwards are returned in the class, or 1·317 per cent. of the *men of the country: 37,698 are in the civil service of the nation; 29,785 are in offices of local government; while 3,708 are officers of the East India government, residing in Great Britain. The Government embarks in few trades; but the great bulk of the persons in its employ are the artificers and labourers in the naval arsenals and dockyards, messengers, letter-carriers, excisemen, Custom-house officers, postmasters, Ordnance-storekeepers. The civil offices have 105 heads of departments comprising commissioners; 190 secretaries and chief clerks; 378 special professional and other officers; 1,893 heads of particular branches; 3,982 clerks, of whom 506 are temporary or extra clerks†.

Civil service.

Sub-class 3: East India Service.

* The figures in this and in the following pages, expressing the aggregate numbers in classes and in sub-classes, are generally taken from Table xxiv, p. ccxviii; and for the sake of brevity, males and females under the age of 20 are referred to as youths and girls, while males and females of the age of 20 and upwards are designated men and women. The numbers in particular occupations are taken from Table 54, pp. cxxviii–cli.

† See (Table, p. cccxlix) a return from the several Government offices of all the persons wholly or partly employed. The numbers are greater than those in the Tables of the Occupations of the People.

First Class.

The numbers and the ages of the Peers and Members of the House of Commons are subjoined. (Table 36.)

Among the persons engaged in local government are returned 2,302 magistrates, 1,794 officers of local Boards, 18,348 policemen, 1,838 gaolers and prison officers. There are few women or boys in the First Class.

Second Class.

The Second Class comprises the men who are engaged in the defence and wars of the country: the officers, soldiers, marines, and seamen of the army and navy, as well as those serving as half-pay officers and pensioners. Only a part of the army and navy is at home; and large numbers of the pensioners are engaged in trades and labour of various kinds.

Sub-class 1: Army.
Sub-class 2: Navy.

But complete returns have been furnished by the War Office, the Admiralty, the Ordnance, and the Offices for Half-pay and Pensions; from which it appears that the army and navy had on March 31st 1851—exclusive of the East India Company's army and navy, and officers of the staff of the army not serving with their regiments, and militia—178,773 effective men; namely, 142,870 in the army, 35,903 in the navy; besides 83,797 non-effectives on half-pay or pensions,—63,305 from the army, 20,492 from the navy. The effectives of the army comprised 6,593 officers, 136,277 men; and the 142,870 were composed of,—cavalry, 12,911; infantry, 115,567; artillery, 12,006; engineers, 2,386: of whom were stationed in England and Wales, 36,504; Scotland, 2,655; the Islands in the British Seas, 993; Ireland, 26,272; the Colonies, 44,402; India, 29,096; on passage out or home, 2,948.

Pensioners.

The numbers of the several ages are distributed in the table below (37).

This is the army and navy of the United Kingdom, or of the Empire, exclusive of the Indian army and navy.

Ireland. Scotland. England.

Ireland, comprising so much of the Celtic—and Scotland, so much of the Celtic and Scandinavian populations—contribute largely to the army. England, with its Anglo-Saxon and Scandinavian people—whose "home is on the deep" —furnishes seamen to the navy.

There were in the middle of 1851, 5,610,777 men at the age of 20 and upwards of Great Britain; of whom 183,255 belonged to the army and navy, —120,407 as effective force, and 62,848 on half-pay or as pensioners liable to serve under certain contingencies. The active force is 2·146 per cent. of the men of Great Britain, or 1 in 47; and if 13,673 men and boys under the age of 20 are added, making 134,080, 1 in 158, or 0·633 per cent. of the total population of Great Britain, is found to be engaged in the army and navy.

Proportion of men in the army and navy to the population.

One-fourth part of the active force of the United Kingdom is left out of the calculation, as it may fairly be brought into account by the Census Commissioners of Ireland. (The strength of the Army and Navy has been considerably augmented since 1851.)

It is one of the results of the progress of civilization that a small proportion of the population serves for the protection not only of the lives, the liberties, and the property of the men, women, and children of the United Kingdom, but of the British Empire. The life of savages is spent in war; but the civilized populations, who are born courageous, have only to dedicate a portion of their time and of their people to the pursuit of arms in order to insure ten times as much security as the savage enjoys.

Effects of civilization on the means of defence.

The Table may be read thus:—Of every 100 Officers and Men in the Army and Navy of the British Empire there were 68 Effectives and 32 Non-effectives, 79 of whom belonged to the Army and 21 to the Navy, at the Time the Census was taken. Of every 100 Officers and Men in the British Army, there were 69 Effectives and 31 Non-effectives, of whom 5 were Officers and 95 were Men. And of every 100 Effectives, the proportions are—9 Cavalry, 10 Artillery and Engineers, and 81 Infantry, of whom 47 were born and 26 were serving in England and Wales, 11 were born and 2 were serving in Scotland, 37 were born and 18 were serving in Ireland, and so on.

SECOND CLASS.

Army, navy, and population.

The number of men in Great Britain of the age of 15–45 is 4,801,900; one-tenth of whom would form an army of 480,190. One soldier to every hundred people in the entire population supplies 211,850 men. The same levy on the population of the United Kingdom would return about 277,000 men.

Hume has remarked, that among people entirely employed in the creation of necessary subsistence, men can less readily be spared for war than in nations that are supplied with such subsistence by the labours of a portion of their number; as the men working in the production of luxuries may, without any great disadvantage, be employed in warfare. Thus much is certain, that if the people advanced in civilization wisely apply the arts and sciences of life to the improvement of their health, vigour, energy, and military institutions, they must enjoy as great advantages as they enjoy in peace—over barbarians in war.

Clergymen.
Ministers.
Lawyers.
Medical men.

The THIRD CLASS comprises the members of the three learned professions, or—as they are designated in common language—clergymen or ministers, lawyers, and medical men, with their irregular assistants of various kinds, and their immediate subordinates. A large proportion of the numbers in the FIRST CLASS, and the whole of the Army and Navy (Class 2.), are now in the immediate and direct service of the State. In the Third Class the State exercises considerable influence by its patronage and power in appointing Bishops and Judges; but the incomes are derived from such sources in the Established Church that the State exercises little direct control over the discipline or conduct of the members; and so regulated is the Law that the Judges can only be removed on well-defined contingencies. The clergymen in Great Britain of the Established Churches amount to 18,587*; the Protestant ministers to 8,521; the Roman Catholic priests to 1,093; theological students, and various real or pretended religious teachers, to 1,477. The total numbers in the class are 30,047. The churches have connected with them a considerable number of subordinate officers, whose time is, however, only very partially engaged; so that they have generally other occupations under which they are returned. Thus only 2,386 men are referred to the head "parish clerks;" 815 are called sextons, 756 church officers; and the whole sub-class comprehends 4,573 males, 901 females.

The Medical Profession has not, like the professions of Divinity and Law, any direct connexion with the State; its numbers (sub-class 3.) are 22,383 —or exclusive of students and assistants 18,728; of whom 2,328 are returned as physicians, 15,163 as surgeons or apothecaries. The best oculists, aurists, and dentists have the licenses of surgeons, and are so returned. But many of the 1,167 dentists are mechanists. The males of the sub-class 6., who supply the drugs and instruments which the medical profession use, are 16,146,—of whom 15,333 are druggists, and 430 are surgical instrument makers. Empirics of various kinds,—worm doctors, homœopathic professors, herb doctors, and hydropathic practitioners,—figure in the sub-class to a small extent.

Sub-class 3: Medical men. Physicians. Surgeons. Oculists. Aurists. Dentists. Sub-class 6. Druggists. Surgical instrument makers.

The members of the Profession of the Law are the least numerous body, and sustain no competition from without, such as that to which the clergy and medical men are exposed;—a competition which, however, chiefly affects the incomes of the latter class, as the incomes of the clergy are generally secured. The clergy of the Established Churches (18,587), the lawyers (16,763), and the medical men (18,728) differ little from each other in numbers,—and in the aggregate amount to 54,078. The three professions with their allied and subordinate members, not differing greatly from the average of 37,000 to each, amount to 110,730, and their importance cannot be over-rated; yet in point of mere numbers they would be outvoted by the tailors of the kingdom.

The three Learned Professions.

The FOURTH CLASS comprises the poet, the historian, the painter, the sculptor, the musician, the architect, and the natural philosopher, as well as the professors and teachers of literature and science. To this class belong the Shakespeares, Humes, Handels, Raphaels, Michael Angelos, Wrens, and Newtons; but as the Second Class comprised the whole of the Army, from the field-marshal down to the soldier in the ranks, so this class includes as well the humblest as the highest teachers of mankind. The class in the middle ages formed a part of the clergy (clerus), and enjoyed endowments; but, except Fellows of Colleges, the members have latterly had, as an order, no rents or settled income from such sources. They therefore often derive their income from other sources than their profession, and have returned themselves under other occupations.

FOURTH CLASS. Arts. Literature. Science.

The authors, writers, and literary men are in the first sub-class, which numbers 2,866; including, however, men who called themselves Graduates and Fellows of Colleges. 436 are authors; 1,302 editors or writers. The artists (sub-class 2.), in the wide sense comprehending all who devote themselves to the fine arts, are returned at 8,600; including, however, 4,915 painters, some of whom generally call themselves artists, but are often called by others drawing-masters. Many of the 2,971 architects are undoubtedly builders: and here the want of a better nomenclature is felt; but it is sufficient to bear in mind, that in the arts, as in the learned professions, subordinate but necessary and highly useful classes also are associated with artists in the production of their works. Women are also returned as authors and artists.

Sub-class 1: Authors. Editors. Public writers. Sub-class 2: Artists. Painters. Architects.

The professors of science (sub-class 3.) are singularly few: according to the returns the number is 466; but many of them are returned among the three Learned Professions, and in the subsequent sub-class 4., of teachers; which include 34,378 men,—namely, 23,488 schoolmasters, 4,371 general teachers, 3,149 music-masters, 1,530 professors of languages, 554 professors of mathematics, and a few more.

Sub-class 3: Persons of Science. Sub-class 4: Teachers.

The number of women in the previous classes and sub-classes is inconsiderable; but females now appear among the teachers to the number of 71,966, Schoolmistresses.

Fifth Class.

The Fifth Class comprises large numbers of the population that have hitherto been held to have no occupation; but it requires no argument to prove that the wife, the mother, the mistress of an English Family—fills offices and discharges duties of no ordinary importance; or that children are or should be occupied in filial or household duties, and in the task of education, either at home or at school.

Wife. Mother. Mistress of a family. Daughter.

Occupations of women.

The most important production of a country is its population. And under the institution of marriage, and the actual organization of families, this country has a population of much higher character than countries where polygamy prevails, where the wife is confined at home, and where the management of the household in all its details,—and the care of providing all necessaries,—belong to the husband.* The Asiatic wife in the seraglio is a slave, and the princes are the sons of slaves; the wife in Athens was shut up in the Gynæconitis; but the Roman women presented examples of the true wife and mother (mater-familias); and, after their corruption and degeneracy, the further and more complete type was developed among the Germans or Anglo-Saxons.

Without overlooking the high duties which women, as well as men, perform in England, it must be admitted that St. Paul, when he says, "I will therefore "that the younger women marry, bear children, guide the house (γαμειν, "τεκνογονειν, οικόδεσποτειν†)," lays down for the women of this class their substantial business; which cannot be neglected without imminent peril to their children, —to the nation of the next generation. The child receives nurture, warmth, affection, admonition, education, from a good mother; who, with the child in her arms, is in the eyes of all European nations surrounded by a sanctity which is only adequately expressed in the highest works of art. The fatal effects of living in concubinage—or of a wife sending her child to the Foundling Hospital—neglecting her duties—leaving her children to the care of strangers—are well known; for under such circumstances monogamic nations inevitably fall in arrear, like the races who practise polygamy.

Spinning, weaving, in wool.

Formerly in this country spinning was carried on extensively as a domestic occupation; and weaving, or tapestry work, was the occupation of ladies of high quality, who, after the heroic ages, might have been addressed in England and Scotland as the King addressed Penelope's attendants:

> "Ye modest maids, away!
> Go, with the Queen the spindle guide; or cull
> (The partners of her cares) the silver wool."—Odyssey, xvi.

Spinning as well as weaving is, however, now generally abandoned, but the household works and processes are still sufficiently numerous; as they include, among large classes of the population, the making and mending of apparel, washing, cooking, cleansing, nursing, teaching, and other offices.

The importance of the duties of a wife is seen in the Anglo-Saxon labourer's cottage—in the clean house, the dry floor, the healthy children and their neat clothes—the husband's comfortable meal, and the enjoyment which, under all difficulties, she manages to shed around her; and is still more strikingly displayed in higher circles. The duties of a wife, a mother, and a mistress of a family can only be efficiently performed by unremitting attention; accordingly it is found that in districts where the women are much employed from home, the children and parents perish in great numbers.

The Husband as well as the Housewife in the British Family performs household duties, although he is in all cases classed under other special occupations.

Other occupations of wives and widows.

Women, however, in certain branches of business at home render important services; such as the wives of farmers, of small shopkeepers, innkeepers, shoemakers, butchers; and others carry on businesses of various kinds, or are employed in various ways. Thus Great Britain contained 3,461,524 wives, of whom 830,141 (or one in four) were engaged in some extraneous occupation; and 795,590 widows, of whom 505,938, or two in three, were referred to occupations in other classes. Of the sons and daughters and relatives at home of the age of 20 and upwards, the greater part are variously occupied; but 322,347 women and 16,236 men are returned simply as the children or as the near relatives of the heads of families, while a few figure as pupils or scholars. The sons at home and other near male relatives under 20 years of age not receiving instruction at school amount to 1,984,665; the daughters and female relatives to 2,421,969; the boys who were receiving instruction as scholars to 1,404,827; the girls to 1,341,010. This return was made by the heads of families, and is quite independent of the school returns, which have been reported on separately, and with which, as regards the males, it agrees remarkably in the general results.*

* Picart's Religious Ceremonies, vol. vii. p. 102.
† Our English translators, it will be noticed, have cautiously rendered οικόδεσποτειν.

Fifth Class

Scholars.

Every British child should unquestionably be taught reading, writing, and the elements of knowledge; yet of 4,694,583 children of the ages 5–15, only 2,405,442, or little more than half the number, are returned by the parents and heads of families as scholars at home or at schools; while 705,409 are employed in some extraneous employment, and 1,583,732 are simply occupied as children at home. We venture here to express the hope that a great and effectual effort may be made, in some way, to educate these children.

Defective education of the people.

The Sixth Class of the people comprises those who are principally engaged in lodging, entertaining, attending, or providing articles of dress, so as to be brought much into personal contact with those whom they serve. The first of the three sub-classes contains, exclusive of all under 20 years of age, 28,881 innkeepers—22,777 men and 6,104 women; 23,025 lodging-house keepers—2,955 men and 20,070 women; 3,057 coffee-house and eating-house keepers—2,004 men and 1,053 women. The beer-house keepers are in the Class 13.

Sixth Class.

Sub-class 1: Innkeepers. Lodging-house keepers. Coffee-house keepers.

In the second sub-class are 1,038,791 domestic servants—133,626 males and 905,165 females. Of the males, 36,689 are under 20 years of age, 96,937 are 20 years of age and upwards; of the females, 322,904 are under 20 years of age, and 582,261 are 20 years of age and upwards. Of the whole number of men, 25,186 are returned as ostlers and other inn servants; 7,579 are called coachmen, 16,194 grooms, and 5,052 gardeners. The undertakers, who find garments—and a grave—for the dead, are placed in this class, and are returned at 1,089; but the office is often associated with other occupations, such as upholsterer, cabinet-maker, and joiner.

Ostlers. Coachmen. Grooms. Gardeners. Undertakers.

The dress of both sexes occupies the third sub-class; which comprises 11,895 hairdressers and wigmakers, 13,426 hatters, 1,510 furriers, 135,028 tailors, 2,534 shawl-manufacturers, 3,617 hosiers and haberdashers, 35,423 hose (stocking) manufacturers, 4,539 glovers (exclusive of silk-glove makers), 243,052 shoemakers, 3,819 patten and clog makers; 2,340 umbrella, parasol, and stick makers; and 2,164 rag gatherers and dealers—among males:—of females—3,549 are hatters, 20,538 straw hat and bonnet makers, 7,628 bonnet-makers, 4,793 cap-makers, 1,959 furriers, 17,644 tailors, 3,299 shawl manufacturers, 267,425 milliners or dressmakers, 72,940 seamstresses or shirtmakers, 12,769 staymakers, 30,076 hose (stocking) manufacturers, 25,343 glovers, 31,418 shoemakers, 1,081 rag gatherers and dealers, 1,797 umbrella, parasol, stick makers; and, finally, 145,373 washerwomen, manglers, laundry-keepers, of whom no less than 136,582 are women of 20 years of age and upwards.

Sub-class 3: Makers of dresses. Hairdressers. Hatters. Furriers. Tailors. Shawl-manufacturers. Hosiers. Hose (stocking) manufacturers. Glovers. Shoemakers. Patten and clog makers. Umbrella makers. Rag gatherers. Bonnet-makers. Cap makers. Milliners. Seamstresses. Staymakers. Washerwomen.

This great class comprises 2,420,173 persons; of whom 632,713 are men, 1,787,460 are women; and of the men 120,504 are under 20 years of age, 512,209 are 20 years of age and upwards; of the women, 458,168 and 1,329,292 are the numbers at corresponding ages. It affords much employment to young men; and is the chief field of labour to women—particularly to young women, who, however, as they advance in years marry and re-enter the Fifth Class.

Of every 100 women of the age of 20 and upwards, 22 are in the Sixth Class, 54 in the Fifth Class; or 76 are in the fifth and sixth classes together; nearly 8 are in the agricultural class; while 8 are in the silk, cotton, wool, and other trades or manufactures in which the material of clothes and furniture is made.

Seventh Class. (Commercial class.)

The Seventh Class is less numerous. Certain persons in the community hold a large portion of the property and annual produce in their hands, which they, or agents who act for them, are always seeking to sell, let, or lend; and others are conversely seeking to buy or borrow, either personally or through agents. They are included in the Seventh Class. They are found in exchanges, markets, shops,—bargaining, higgling, chaffering,—dealing with and using money, or exchanging and valuing articles of commerce. The class also comprises the chief men of the great mercantile community that from Great Britain extends its operations all over the world. It also includes 34,202

Then follow 6,138 accountants, 31,986 commercial clerks, 9,100 commercial travellers, 1,481 salesmen; 2,649 pawnbrokers, 13,328 shopkeepers (branch undefined), 4,606 general dealers, hucksters, costermongers, 16,332 hawkers, pedlars, 1,550 marine-store dealers. Of women (20 and upwards) in the class—532 are pawnbrokers, 1,891 are general dealers, hucksters, costermongers; 14,967 are shopkeepers, 9,551 are hawkers and pedlars. This class does not include such shopkeepers as grocers or tallow-chandlers, who are returned as dealing in particular descriptions of articles.

Eighth Class. (Carrying class.)

The Eighth is a more numerous Class, consisting chiefly of 285,686 men and 100,345 boys, who are employed in the conveyance of men, animals, goods of various kinds, and messages, from place to place. To twist and weave cotton wool into calico is one service; to carry the cotton wool from America to Manchester, and from Manchester to the consumer, is another service—which, though it merely effects a change of place, is as great and useful, and therefore as valuable, as the other, by which a change of texture is effected. 26,043 men are connected with the carrying on railways, 79,546 on roads, 34,925 on canals, 101,193 on the seas and rivers (in Great Britain), 12,304 are warehousemen and storekeepers, 31,260 are messengers and porters. 66,382 of the youths (under 20 years of age) are messengers, porters, errand-boys; the rest are employed as the men are—on the railways, roads, canals, and rivers. The above groups of men comprise 4,165 toll collectors on roads, 49,121 carmen, carriers, carters, draymen; 2,166 coach and cab owners, 1,228 livery stable keepers, 16,260 coachmen, guards, postboys; 2,960 cabmen, 2,951 omnibus owners, conductors; 2,707 men in the canal and inland navigation service, 30,637 boat and bargemen. Of the carriers on seas and rivers, 1,974 are shipowners, 76,485 are seamen in the merchant service, 2,818 pilots, 16,904 in the harbour and dock service, or dock labourers, 1,057 are wharfingers; 284 persons—185 men and 97 boys, besides 2 women—are in the telegraph service. Women and girls figure in the class—as toll collectors, 1,597; boat, barge women, 2,233; warehouse-women, 3,184; messengers, porters, errand-girls, 3,783. The number of women under other heads is inconsiderable.

The first Seven Classes.

The first Seven Classes have to do chiefly with men under different aspects. Some are legislators, or officers of the Government; some, in the discharge of their duties, fight the enemies of their country; others declare the religious duties of mankind. These distribute justice, those preserve or restore health; these appeal to the higher sentiments of poetry and art, those discharge domestic duties in their families. One class entertains and makes dresses; of another class the members meet their fellow-men in the exchange, the market, the shop,—to bargain, to negociate, to buy and sell. The Eighth Class is engaged in the conveyance of men from place to place, and to a still larger extent in the carriage of animals and goods.

The first Seven Classes.

The Eighth Class.

The Ninth Class is one of the largest classes: it possesses and occupies the land, it owns the live stock of the country, and by skilful husbandry produces annually grain, fruits, grasses, animals, and other matters, of the value of several millions. The whole class numbers 2,390,568 persons; 1,806,547 males, 584,021 females; and of the males 1,421,354 are men of 20 years of age and upwards; 385,193 are boys below that age.

Ninth Class. Sub-class 1: Agriculturists.

We have placed 137,446 farmers' sons, grandsons, brothers, nephews, residing with the farmers, in this class, because they almost invariably work in some way on the farm; and 201,736 farmers' wives, 137,724 farmers' daughters at home, are placed among the women of the class, as they are generally engaged in some of the operations connected with the farm. If it should be thought right to exclude them, 339,460 must be deducted from the females of the class.

Farmers' sons, wives, daughters.

The number of land proprietors only includes those who so returned themselves, amounting to 19,989 men, 14,638 women. The land estates in Great Britain are often extensive; and the important duties of the proprietors will be immediately perceived in the state of agriculture where the proprietors do or do not reside, where the farmers are well selected, and where the estates are well or ill managed.*

Land proprietors.

Of the men of 20 years of age and upwards, 277,816 are professedly farmers or graziers†; 90,874 are sons, brothers, and near relatives living with the farmer, 12,691 farm bailiffs, 824,587 out-door agricultural labourers (including 16,085 shepherds); 109,452 in-door farm servants, who are distinguished for the first time. The extent of the practice of taking the young labourer or servant into the house may be traced through every county. 1,247 land surveyors, and 2,280 agents, factors, are returned. Among the youths under 20, who are exceedingly numerous—201,216 are out-door labourers, that is, labourers who do not lodge in the farmer's house; 126,491 are in-door servants, and do lodge in the house.

Farmers.

Agricultural labourers.

Land surveyors. Land agents.

In-door servants.

Farms are often held by widows, and 27,986 women are called farmers. It is the practice in some counties for the women to work in the field, and 70,899 women and girls are out-door agricultural labourers; namely, 56,073 of 20 years of age and upwards, 14,826 under 20 years of age. 128,251 women are in-door farm servants—63,538 of 20 years of age and upwards, and 64,713 under 20 years of age.

Female farmers.

In-door farm servants.

The woods occupy 10,070 men and boys, of whom 9,832 are returned under "Woodman." Of women, only 18 are returned in the sub-class.

Sub-class 2: Woodmen.

Small gardens are cultivated by labourers, farmers, and others; but in the returns, in addition to the 5,052 gardeners who are domestic servants, 70,544 men and 7,918 boys are specifically called gardeners; 2,280 men and 356 boys, nurserymen. 2,484 women and girls are also returned as gardeners.

Sub-class 3: Gardeners.

Nurserymen.

Twenty-six per cent. of the men, and eight per cent. of the women, 20 years of age and upwards—eight per cent. of the boys, three per cent. nearly of the girls, under 20 years of age—are specially employed in the Ninth Class, which may be designated the agricultural class.

Proportions in the Ninth Class.

* See the various Reports of agricultural writers, and particularly the recent interesting work of Mr. Caird.

† This number (277,816) makes, with the (27,986) women returned as farmers, 305,802, while 285,936 farms are returned in Table xxxiii. See for explanation of this difference p. lxxviii. See also Summary Tables p. cclxxxiii. Table xxxiii.

Ninth Class.

The farmer and the grazier deal extensively in animals, but it is almost always in connexion with the soil; and the animals are chiefly horses, cattle, sheep, pigs, or poultry.

Tenth Class.

The Tenth Class comprises 100,262 persons—of whom 86,528 are men, 12,454 are youths (so we call all under 20 years of age for shortness), who are especially employed about animals, but are in many ways connected with the class preceding. There are horse-breeders who are occupiers of land, and are in consequence often returned, like graziers, as farmers. Then, confining the enumeration to men, follow—1,323 horse-dealers, 1,163 horse-breakers, 24,610 jockeys, grooms, and horse-keepers, and 5,979 farriers, or veterinary surgeons, who, however, are the surgeons of other animals as well as of horses.

Horsemen.

In the Sixth Class of domestic servants, besides 4,840 boys, 11,354 grooms of the age of 20 and upwards have been enumerated; and in the carrying class (VIII.) are 16,260 coachmen, postboys, guards; 2,960 cabmen, and 49,121 carmen, carters, carriers, and draymen, of whom many are extensively employed in the management of horses. As huntsmen and whippers-in 238 men in the Tenth Class are mentioned, besides hound attendants. 117 men are dog breakers or dealers, 5,340 men are cattle or sheep dealers or salesmen; 2,852 men are drovers. Pigs are dealt in by 959 merchants or dealers. All the preceding persons deal in domestic animals. Birds and wild animals,—which are either pursued because they are good for food, or because they afford sport, or because they are noxious,—also engage the time of great numbers of people. Foxhunters and sportsmen who devote much of their life to field sports, do not, for obvious reasons, figure here. But with their assistants 9,221 gamekeepers are returned. There are also rabbit-catchers, bird-catchers, keepers of animals of various kinds, and the officers of menageries; there are the rat-catchers, the mole-catchers; and, in all, 2,072 men whose lives are expended in hunting and destroying noxious animals. One man calls himself an apiarian. 31,679 fishermen and 5,613 boys procure large supplies of food from the rivers and the seas. In this branch of the class only are women employed to any extent, and the fisherwomen and girls number 1,002. It will be recollected that the Census was taken in March, and that fishing and hunting are pursued only during certain seasons; so that among the other classes great numbers of men may be found who occasionally go out to fish, and can manage boats.

Character of the Tenth Class.

This Tenth Class is altogether a peculiar race of men; silent, circumspective, prompt, agile, dexterous, enduring, danger-defying men, generally—but modified variously by the classes of animals which occupy them. They contain the representatives of the hunting tribes of old, when wild animals abounded, and men lived on the produce of the chase. What dignity Hercules has lost in his followers, Ceres we may hope has gained in conformity with the poet's prayer:

> Spicâ donet Cererem coronâ.

By their habits many of the class must be well adapted to the purposes of war; they are sometimes idle, and in a militia they could be turned to account, for, under pressure, their occupations could probably be as easily suspended as the occupations of any other equally efficient class.

Eleventh Class.

Characteristics. (Arts.)

Artizans.
Mechanists.
Handicraftsmen.

The Eleventh Class consists of 763,336 persons—624,503 men, 121,928 boys, and only 11,617 women, 5,288 girls. They are engaged in the higher class of mechanical and chemical arts; are intimately connected with artists, and men of science (IV.); from whom they frequently, either directly or indirectly, derive materials, direction, or inspiration. They multiply copies of original works. The matter in which they deal comes from the animal and vegetable as well as the mineral kingdom; but it is no longer living. They do not breed animals nor grow plants. They make things, and use tools or machines; they either in their works employ matter of various kinds in combination, or the works involve skill that fixes the mind and diverts attention from the material of which it is composed. The subdivision of labour is extensive. The masters often possess great intelligence; and have large capitals embarked in their materials, machines, buildings, and products. Eleventh Class. Characteristics.

There are seventeen sub-classes; and the persons in the first sub-class, occupied in the production of books, amount to 31,034 men and 10,390 boys, 3,655 women and 1,909 girls. The publishers and booksellers constitute 6,499 of the men, the bookbinders 5,243, the printers 18,242 men. A large number of boys are employed in all branches. The theatres in which dramatic productions are performed employ managers, agents, officers, servants, actors, dancers, and others. The actors are 1,285 men, 113 boys; the actresses 643, besides 135 danseuses. The higher order of actors belongs naturally to the Class IV.; and the dancers and other figurantes, the performers on musical instruments, and the copying engravers, with some others, in the Class XI., would form there a natural sub-class. We shall not now, however, transfer them from their present places. In the sub-class 3., consisting of 10,772 males and 899 females, are 4,803 men, 949 youths, and 532 females, who are employed in playing musical instruments; 404 organ builders, and 3,022 musical instrument makers. The fourth sub-class consists of 10,060 males, 428 females, who are employed on pictures and engravings: 4,388 men are engravers, 782 copper-plate printers, 1,366 lithographers or lithographic printers. In the sub-class 5., which is occupied in carving and making figures, 1,002 men are wood carvers. 427 men and 90 youths, 1,541 women and 1,452 girls, are artificial flower makers. The sixth sub-class, engaged in shows and games, or in making instruments and apparatus, numbers 2,311 men, 841 women. There are exhibition keepers, conjurors, ventriloquists, equestrians, pedestrians, billiard-table keepers and markers, shooting-gallery keepers, race-course officers, cricketers and cricket-ball makers, archery-goods makers, fishing-tackle makers. 1,260 men and 373 youths, 710 women and 166 girls, are engaged in making and dealing in toys. Among the men of the sub-class 7. are 1,757 pattern designers, 2,682 civil engineers, 470 draughtsmen. Under medals and dies (sub-class 8.) are 372 men,—mould-makers, die engravers and sinkers. On watches and philosophical instruments, 17,899 men, 4,008 youths, and 471 women and girls, are employed. Of the men, 15,338, besides 3,440 youths, are watch and clock makers, 672 are makers of philosophical instruments, 1,497 are opticians, 743 are weighing-machine, scale, and measure makers. The manufactures of arms (sub-class 10.) employ 5,945 men and 1,820 youths, as gunsmiths, armourers, sword-cutlers, and bayonet-makers. 54,819 males, or 44,563 men and 10,256 youths, are employed in making machines and iron tools of various kinds, under sub-class 11; and 39,306 of the men, besides 8,744 youths, are engine and machine makers, 3,435 are tool-makers; the rest are employed in making particular tools, chiefly connected with manufactures. This important sub-class has latterly increased with great rapidity. The makers of carriages (sub-class 12.) comprise 16,431 coachmakers, of whom 13,872 are men of 20 years of age and upwards. The saddlers and harness-makers (sub-class 13.) are 16,890 males (14,211 men, 2,679 youths) in number; the whipmakers, 1,005.

Actors. Actresses. Dancuses.

Sub-class 3: Musicians. Organ builders. Musical instrument makers.

Sub-class 4: Engravers. Copper-plate printers. Lithographers.

Sub-class 6: Shows. Games. Sports. Toys.

Sub-class 7: Pattern designers. Civil engineers. Draughtsmen.

Sub-class 8: Mould makers.

Sub class 9: Watches. Philosophical instruments. Opticians. Weighing-machine and scale makers.

Sub-class 10: Gunsmiths.

Sub-class 11: Machines. Tool-makers.

Sub-class 12: Coachmakers.

Sub-class 13: Saddlers. Whipmakers.

Sub-class 14.—In addition to many of the artificers in the Government dockyards, 25,905 men and 5,981 youths are employed in building ships, boats, and barges. Sub-class 14: Shipwrights.

Houses—that so singularly distinguish civilized men—employ 389,147 men and 66,729 youths, or nearly half a million of men and youths; that is, 7 per cent. of the 5,458,815 men of the age of 20 and upwards. Sub-class 15: Houses.

ELEVENTH CLASS.
Sub-class 15:
Surveyors.
Builders.
Carpenters.
Bricklayers.
Masons.
Slaters.
Plasterers.
Paper-hangers.
Plumbers and glaziers.

In an increasing population men are not only employed in building houses that supply the place of those which have fallen into decay, or in effecting repairs, but every day commence new structures, and are therefore disproportionately numerous. Among the men are 2,594 surveyors, 11,741 builders, 155,254 carpenters and joiners (some of whom also make furniture), 58,848 bricklayers, 87,338 masons and paviors, 6,255 slaters, 15,036 plasterers, 1,529* paper-hangers, 51,382 house-painters, plumbers, and glaziers.

Sub-class 16.
Agricultural implement makers.
Wheelwrights.
Millwrights.

41,236 persons make agricultural implements, machines, and mills. Of the 34,541 men, 25,261 are wheelwrights, 8,385 are millwrights.

Sub-class 17:
Chemical manufacturers.
Chemists.
Dyers.
Scourers.
Calenderers.
Drug merchants.
Starch manufacturers.
Blacking makers.
Dye manufacturers.
Gunpowder makers.

The manufacture of substances by chemical processes is now rapidly extending, and employs 18,046 men, 4,329 youths: 3,827 of the men, 581 youths, are manufacturing chemists; 9,475 men, 2,681 youths, dyers, scourers, calenderers; and there are drug merchants (143), drug grinders, drysalters, wafer makers; starch manufacturers 433; blacking makers and dealers, 496; dye, colour manufacturers, 1,156; gunpowder makers, 433; sulphur, saltpetre, vitriol, alum, Prussian blue, ink, copperas, alkali, whiting, match, madder, indigo—manufacturers and merchants—in considerable numbers. The class contains few women or girls.

Trades and manufactures in Classes xii, xiii, xiv.

The three subsequent classes (XII., XIII., XIV.) comprise those who work chiefly or exclusively in matters that are derived from one only of the three kingdoms of nature; and, with the preceding class (XI.), they comprise all that can be properly described as persons who are engaged in trades, mechanical arts, handicrafts, and manufactures, including mining. 2,250,369 men, 615,961 youths, 550,759 women, and 299,328 girls under 20—or collectively more than 37 hundred thousands—work in these important branches of the industry of Great Britain.

TWELFTH CLASS.
Sub class 1:
Dealers in animal food.

The persons in the TWELFTH CLASS, who work and deal in matters that are derived simply from the animal kingdom, are the least numerous of the four classes; 84,526 men and 16,560 youths, with 38,906 women and girls, are employed in preparing and distributing animal food. Thus, 10,204 men and 4,380 women are cowkeepers or milksellers; 3,014 men are cheesemongers; 53,617 men and 1,716 women are butchers, besides 12,295 boys; 6,865 men and 1,680 women are provision dealers and curers; 1,879 men are poulterers and game dealers; 6,991 men and 2,219 women are fishmongers. The great bulk of the women in the sub-class are 25,861 butchers' wives, who have been placed here as they often assist their husbands in the business. The grease, intestines, bones, horns, ivory, whalebone, of various animals, are converted to a thousand useful purposes by the 10,344 men and 2,255 youths in the second sub-class; 1,214 men are soap boilers, 4,282 are tallow chandlers, 1,757 are comb-makers; and there are cat-gut makers, goldbeaters'-skin makers, manure manufacturers, grease boilers, wax refiners, glue makers, gelatine manufacturers; bone gatherers, workers, boilers, calciners; ivory workers, horn workers, tortoise-shell workers, whalebone merchants and workers, and sponge dealers. In sub-class 3., in hides and skins, 23,647 men, 4,007 youths, work; 1,619 men are fellmongers, 1,689 skinners, 7,687 tanners, 10,808 curriers. Feathers and quills (sub-class 4.) occupy 563 men, 334 women, and a few young persons. Hair and fur (sub-class 5.) occupy more than 12,000 persons; 6,383 of the men, 1,640 of the youths, 1,953 women and girls, are brush and broom makers; 614 of the men, 305 of the youths, 1,782 women and girls, are engaged in the manufacture of hair and bristles. The furriers—1,510 males, and 1,959 females—are referred to the SIXTH CLASS (dress). By far the largest sub-class (6.) is that engaged on wool, which has been spun and woven from the earliest times for clothing by women, and in this age of organized industry is worked on a large scale by machinery. On wool after it has been taken from the sheep, 295,276 persons—namely, 125,814 men, and 67,757 women—work; in conjunction with 50,879 youths and 50,826 girls. Of the men 1,692 are woolstaplers, and in many other branches are small numbers; 62,584 work in the manufacture of woollen cloth, 6,007 are clothiers, 2,973 woollen drapers, 1,187 fullers, 1,253 wool and woollen dyers; 32,792 manufacture worsted, 2,487 stuffs, 2,259 flannel, 1,678 blankets, 7,265 carpets and rugs. The boys, youths, women, and girls, are employed in similar work.

Twelfth Class.

Sub class 6:
Woolstaplers.
Woollen manufacture.
Clothiers.
Woollen drapers.
Fullers.
Wool dyers.
Worsted manufacture, stuffs, flannel, blankets, carpets.

Silk is imported, and on it 41,520 men, 53,629 women, 15,357 youths, and 30,430 girls, or 140,936 persons in the aggregate, work. 32,186 men, 43,018 women, 12,983 youths, 26,383 girls, are in the silk manufacture; 749 men in the silk-glove manufacture; 1,497 men are silk dyers and silk printers; 3,875 men, 1,038 youths, manufacture ribbons; 1,795 silk mercers are returned, besides women and 499 youths. There are also workers and dealers in velvet, fancy goods, trimming, embroidery, gimp, gauze, coach lace, and crape.

Sub-class 7:
Silk manufacture.
Ribbon manufacture.
Silk glovers.
Silk mercers.

The Thirteenth Class comprises the large number of 1,375,014 persons, who work and deal in matters that are derived from the vegetable kingdom, and supply a large proportion of the food, stimulants, and raiment of mankind. As might be inferred from the connexion of the persons in the class with those in the Sixth Class, and their analogous employments, a large number of women and young people of both sexes are employed in this, as they are in the preceding, class.

Thirteenth Class.
Workers and dealers in matters derived from the vegetable kingdom.

The sub-class 1. has to do with vegetable food; and of men comprises 6,417 corn merchants or dealers, besides 637 corn agents and factors; 30,415 millers (masters and men), besides 6,291 youths; 1,418 flour dealers; 43,372 bakers (masters and men), besides 12,291 youths; 6,988 confectioners (masters and men), besides 2,059 youths; 7,867 greengrocers and fruiterers, 1,066 fruit and flower hawkers, 869 potato merchants, besides others who work or deal in oats, beans, peas, rice, maccaroni, and dulse: 17,987 women, and 1,668 girls, are engaged in all branches of the sub-class. Of women, 6,436 are bakers, 4,227 confectioners, 5,036 greengrocers or fruiterers.

Sub-class 1:
Dealers in vegetable food.
Corn merchants.
Corn factors.
Millers.
Flour dealers.
Bakers.
Confectioners.
Greengrocers.
Fruit and flower hawkers.
Potato merchants.

In the production and sale of drinks and stimulants (sub-class 2.), 142,918 men, 55,437 women, 18,670 youths, and 1,313 girls, are engaged. Among the men are 438 hop merchants, 10,376 maltsters, 287 yeast dealers, 17,246 brewers, and 36,921 licensed victuallers and beer-shop keepers. It is not easy in the returns to distinguish from the latter body the keepers of hotels and inns, who amount to 22,777, and make with those mentioned 59,698 men, besides 15,436 women. There are of men 8,850 wine and spirit merchants, 1,397 distillers and rectifiers, 2,512 sugar refiners, 55,480 grocers, besides 16,830 women; 2,230 men, 1,561 youths, manufacture tobacco; 2,940 are tobacconists, 497 perfumers: cider, spruce, cordials, vinegar, sauces, ginger beer, soda water, liquorice, tea, coffee, cocoa, chocolate, spice, mustard, and other stimulants, are made or dealt in also as separate trades.

Sub-class 2:
Hop merchants.
Maltsters.
Yeast dealers.
Brewers.
Licensed victuallers.
Wine and spirit merchants.
Distillers.
Sugar refiners.
Grocers.
Tobacconists.
Perfumers.

In the sub-class 3., of oils, gums, and resins, the principal persons are the oil millers and refiners, 798 men; oil merchants and agents, 301; oil and colourmen, 1,675. French polishers, 2,666 men, 623 women. The sub-class 4. comprises 3,821 timber merchants, 1,552 dealers in wood. In the sub-class 5. are 39 cork merchants, and 1,768 cork cutters, besides 481 youths in the same business. Wood (sub-class 6.) is worked in by 32,436 sawyers, 1,539 lath makers; of the makers of furniture in wood chiefly are 29,391 cabinet makers and upholsterers (with 7,039 youths); 4,845 men chair-makers, with 1,186 youths; 1,796 furniture brokers; 6,330 turners; 1,523 box makers: 4,467 women and girls also are upholsterers or cabinet makers, 653 chair makers. Wood is further converted into utensils by the sub-class 8., comprising 17,025 coopers of 20 years of age and upwards, and 3,116 youths below 20 years of age; there are also wine coopers, hoop makers, and cask dealers. Among the makers of wood tools (sub-class 9.) are rule makers, last makers, frame makers, 1,229 men; bobbin makers, 963 men; block and print cutters, 1,317 men.

Sub-class 10 : Willow, cane, rush, and straw workers.

Basket makers.

Hay and straw dealers. Thatchers.

Straw plait merchants, dealers, and workers.

On willow, cane, rush, and straw, 14,854 men, and 5,626 youths, 15,874 women, and 13,362 girls, in sub-class 10., work. Wicker work was one of the earliest manufactures of the Britons, and it is not improbable that it may have been carried on by the women at home. After the willow grower, cutter, dyer, come 7,833 basket makers,—6,448 men, 1,385 youths; besides 687 women and girls. The hay and straw dealers are 1,026 men; the thatchers, who cover houses in some parts of the country, and hay and corn ricks after the harvests, are 5,465: there are 428 straw plait merchants, factors, and dealers, but the straw plait manufacture is carried on chiefly by women and boys; the men in the business are 655; boys and youths, 3,265; women, 14,992; girls, 13,150. The manufacture is rapidly extending in the south-midland counties.

Sub-class 11 : Hemp, flax, and cotton workers. Hemp merchants. Ropemakers. Canvas makers and dealers. Sailcloth manufacturers. Bag makers. Mat makers. Floor-cloth manufacturers. Net makers.

On hemp, flax, and cotton collectively 782,213 persons are employed. The strong rough fibre of hemp is converted into rope, nets, canvas, sails, bags, and other useful articles. In sub-class 11. there are 199 hemp merchants and dealers, 9,290 men ropemakers (with 4,959 youths, and 1,717 women and girls); 1,433 canvas makers and dealers, 2,927 men in the sailcloth manufacture, 883 sailmakers, 559 sacking, sack, and bag makers. Youths under 20 are also engaged in all these trades. 1,039 mat makers, and 546 men in the floor-cloth manufacture, have been referred to the sub-class: of net makers 192 are men, 106 youths, and 1,802 women and girls.

Sub-class 12 : Flax and cotton manufacturers.

Flax and linen manufacturers.

Cotton manufacturers.

Drapers.

Flax and cotton are spun and generally woven in separate factories; but there are mixed fabrics, and the wares are often sold by the same persons. In the sub-class 12., of flax and cotton, 244,596 men, and 233,401 women, 111,425 youths, and 161,427 girls, are enumerated. The flax and linen manufacture employs 33,932 men, 31,589 women, 12,119 youths, and 20,870 girls. The cotton manufacture employs a much larger number of persons—149,214 men, 143,268 women, 73,398 boys, and 104,437 girls: as cotton and calico printers, 13,263 men, dyers 3,024 men, are enumerated, besides youths and girls in large numbers. The drapers count 27,814 men, 5,169 women, 11,042 youths, 1,360 girls. Spinning and weaving hemp and flax were formerly domestic manufactures, and spinning was carried on chiefly by women; but the admirable inventions of recent times have reduced nearly all these processes within the range of machinery; which yields quantities of produce that are enormous as compared with the number of persons in the works. The lace manufacture is carried on partly by machinery and partly by hand; 5,705 men, 3,832 youths, 33,210 women, and 20,870 girls, are engaged. The manufacture of muslin employs 1,446 men, 515 youths, 12,137 women and girls; in muslin embroidery 2,347 females are also employed. Thread, tape, lint, candle wick, flock, plush, wadding, fustian, and gingham, are also separately manufactured, and employ many persons.

Muslin embroiderers.

The linen and cotton textures reach the dress makers of various kinds in the Sixth Class, and are there or in the Fifth Class worked up, cleansed, and repaired for use, until, after the lapse of time, in one of the final stages of their transformation, large quantities are committed to the hands of the sub-class 13., who make or work in paper; and number 14,023 men, 6,604 women, 4,608 youths, and 3,714 girls. There are 146 men paper-merchants. The manufacture of paper employs 5,765 men and 4,534 women, besides 1,845 youths and 2,357 girls: 3,448 men, 928 women, are stationers; and a certain number of persons is employed in making pattern cards, playing cards, labels, tickets, envelopes, paper boxes, pill boxes, paper bags, and in embossing; 1,257 men are paper stainers;—boys and women are also engaged.

Sub-class 13 : Paper workers.

Paper merchants. Paper manufacturers.

Stationers.

Paper stainers.

Thirteenth Class.

The persons in the two preceding classes (XII. and XIII.) that have been passed rapidly in review, are workers and dealers in organic matter, which, diversified as it is in its properties and structure, consists, with some saline matters, of the same elements as constitute water and air—of the same elements as constitute the human body. Those matters are used chiefly as the food, clothing, and furniture of men.

Fourteenth Class. Mineral and metal workers.

We have now to consider a large class of people who work in minerals and metals of various kinds. They are in number 946,204 persons, and are chiefly males—887,446. Of the number, 677,476 are men.

Sub-class 1: Coal.

The first sub-class of 265,198 persons is employed on coal; either extracting it from the earth, distributing it amongst the consumers, or manufacturing it into coke and gas. Coal, itself believed to be of vegetable origin, has taken the place of wood as the source of Fire—the great agent by which the chemical and physical changes are wrought on metals and on organic matters of every kind, in the manufactories, and on the hearths of the country. Coal lies underground, and in its extraction owners, agents, inspectors, officers of various kinds, and miners are engaged. The owners are returned as 703 men; agents and factors, 2,342; coal miners or colliers, 150,722 men, 65,644 youths, or 216,366 males in the aggregate. 10,507 men are returned as coal merchants or dealers; 11,691 as coalheavers or labourers. The coal is found in particular places, and its distribution over London, and other parts of the country, employs a large number of sailors, and labourers. Besides those here enumerated, 1,752 men are returned as coke burners or dealers, and 413 as charcoal burners. The chimneysweepers amount to 4,463 men, 2,178 youths. The men in the gasworks service are 5,223, besides 403 youths and boys. This employment, it will be recollected, is quite of recent creation.

Sub-class 2: Stone and clay.

The workers in stone and clay, sub-class 2., are chiefly employed in preparing the materials of houses and roads, and in working on the highways or railways. 19,860 men and 3,473 youths are stone quarriers; 2,811 men are stone cutters. There are 6,422 slate quarriers, 5,423 limestone quarriers or burners, 1,287 marble masons, 23,374 men and 6,586 youths brickmakers, 31,596 men and 2,710 youths railway labourers, 2,338 platelayers, 3,402 excavators, 1,153 road contractors, inspectors, surveyors, 10,032 road labourers specifically so returned; and, in addition, great numbers of the 312,669 labourers (men) in Class XV. Here 1,222 scavengers are placed.

Sub-class 3: Earthenware manufacture.

In the sub-class 3., of 46,902 there are 25,379 males—15,983 men and 9,396 youths—who are engaged in the earthenware manufacture; 2,500 men and 824 youths who are makers of tobacco pipes; and 3,534 men and 426 youths who are earthenware and glass dealers. A considerable number of women is employed in the light work of this sub-class. 11,133 women and girls are engaged in the manufacture of earthenware, 942 in making tobacco pipes, and 1,768 in the sale of earthenware and glass.

Tobacco pipe makers.
Earthenware and glass dealers.

Sub-class 4: Glass manufacture. Looking-glass makers. Bead makers.

In the sub-class 4. there are 8,100 men, 3,274 youths in the glass manufactures, besides 631 women and girls; others are engaged in making looking-glasses and beads.

Sub-class 5: Salt.

Of salt works (sub-class 5.), 167 men are proprietors; 1,082 men work in the salt manufacture, and 355 are merchants, agents, and dealers.

Sub-class 6: Well sinkers. Waterwork service. Water carriers. Ice dealers.

Of well sinkers (sub-class 6.) there are 450 men; 920 men are in the waterworks service; 128 men are water carriers; 16 are ice dealers.

Sub-class 7: Precious stones. Diamond workers and dealers. Jewellers. Pearl cutters.

Of workers in precious stones (sub-class 7.), 84 males—77 men, 7 youths—work and deal in diamonds; 280 men, 79 youths, are jewellers and lapidaries; 198 men, 83 youths, are pearl cutters.

Sub-class 8: Gold and silver. Gold and silver smiths.

The goldsmiths and silversmiths (sub-class 8.), who are often also jewellers, are 8,456 men, 2,197 youths, in number; the carvers and gilders, 3,665 men and 1,208 youths; the platers, 1,125 men, 329 youths. And there are gold miners, assayers, refiners, goldbeaters, gold and silver lace manufacturers, gold pen makers, guard-chain makers, water-gilders, pencil-case makers, plated ware manufacturers. Women are also employed in nearly all these branches.

Sub-class 9
Copper.
Copper manufacturers.
Coppersmiths.
Copper-miners.

The copper-miners (sub-class 9.) are 18,468—namely, 12,768 men and 5,700 youths; the men engaged in the manufacture of copper are 2,115, the coppersmiths 1,443. And we find 3,918 females—namely, 1,565 women and 2,353 girls—are returned as copper-miners. The number exceeds the number of women and girls who are coal miners, amounting to 2,649.

Sub-class 10:
Tin.
Tin miners.
Tin workers.
Tin-plate workers.
Spoon makers.

The sub-class 10. presents 12,912 tin-miners—8,607 men, 4,305 youths, besides 843 women and 1,295 girls; 9,929 tinmen, tin workers, and tinkers—namely, 7,389 men and 2,540 youths; 3,606 tin-plate workers—namely, 2,917 men and 689 youths; 616 spoon makers—namely, 438 men and 178 youths.

Sub-class 11:
Zinc.

Zinc (sub-class 11.) has only recently been manufactured; 10 merchants, 376 men, 83 youths, are employed.

Sub-class 12:
Lead.
Lead miners.
Lead manufacturers.
Typefounders.

Lead (sub-class 12.) is produced and worked extensively. The lead miners are 16,680 men, 4,937 youths, 400 women, and 513 girls; the manufacturers 1,628 men, 662 boys. There are 1,443 typefounders—namely 974 men and 469 youths, who scarcely belong to the sub-class, as they work in a compound metal.

Sub-class 13:
Brass and mixed metals.
Brassfounders.
Braziers.
Locksmiths and bell-hangers.
Gas-fitters.
White metal manufacturers.
Button makers.

Pin makers.

Thimble makers.
Hook and-eye makers.
Chasers.
Bronzers.
Burnishers.
Japanners and Lacquerers.
Wire makers and drawers.
Wire workers and weavers.

The workers in brass and in other mixed metals are 46,076; comprising 27,634 men, 10,072 youths, 4,986 women, 3,384 girls. The brass founders are 7,407 men, 3,691 youths; the braziers, 3,493 men, 884 youths; the locksmiths and bell-hangers, 4,907 men, 1,425 youths; the gas-fitters, 1,795 men; and white metal manufacturers 442, besides youths and boys. The button makers are 2,045 men, 996 youths and boys, 2,278 women, and 1,677 girls—or 6,996 button makers in the aggregate. There are also merchants and dealers in buttons. The manufacture of pins employs 1,295 persons—306 men, 133 youths, 529 women, and 327 girls. 68 men, 36 youths, 50 women, 46 girls, are thimble makers. The hook-and-eye makers are 73 males, 231 females, including 46 men and 132 women. There are chasers, bronzers, burnishers: also japanners and lacquerers—1,121 men, 406 youths, 751 women, and 535 girls. Of wire makers and drawers, 940 are men, 300 youths, besides women and girls. Of wire workers and weavers, 2,246 men, 622 youths. Rings, snuff-boxes, coffin furniture, clasps, trays, candlesticks, chandeliers, lamps, cocks, jacks, urns, brass collars, tea-pots, coffee-pots, brass letters, stair rods, door furniture, metallic boxes, sinkers—also employ a certain number of persons of both sexes.

Sub-class 14:
Workers in iron and steel.

Iron miners.

Iron manufacturers.
Iron merchants.
Whitesmiths.
Blacksmiths.

Nail makers.

Anchorsmiths and Chainsmiths.
Boiler makers.

The sub-class 14. is the last, the most numerous, and certainly one of the most important. It comprises the 327,483 workers in iron and steel—of whom 308,676 are males, including 238,673 men, 70,003 youths and boys; and 18,807 only are women and girls. Iron and coal are generally found in the same district, and it is not always possible to distinguish the iron miners from the coal miners in the returns. 20,347 men and 6,751 youths and boys are classed here as iron miners; 59,098 men, 20,344 youths, are engaged in the iron manufactures. 964 men are iron merchants, dealers, agents. Of 9,549 whitesmiths, 7,700 are men, 1,849 youths. The blacksmith follows one of the oldest and most widely diffused trades; he is the shoemaker to the horse, and the maker and mender of many iron tools and instruments. He works with the coachmaker, the wheelwright, and the engine maker. The blacksmiths are 112,184—or, 90,324 men, 21,860 youths. The manufacture of nails now employs 13,999 men, 4,549 youths and boys, 6,610 women, and 3,375 girls; or 28,533 persons. The anchorsmiths and chainsmiths are 3,761; 2,516 men, 1,245 youths. The boiler makers are 7,454—namely, 5,945 men, 1509 youths.

FOURTEENTH CLASS.
Sub-class 14:
Ironmongers.
Bit makers.
Bolt makers.
Hinge makers.
Spindle makers.
Screw makers.
Steel merchants.
File makers.
Blade forgers.
Cutlers.
Knife makers.
Fork makers.
Needle makers.
Fish-hook makers.
Scissors makers.
Awl and bodkin makers.
Snuffers makers.
Scythe and sickle makers.
Shovel and spade makers.
Steel mill and coffee-mill makers.
Spring makers.
Razor makers.
Grinders.
Sawsmiths.
Steel pen makers.

The ironmongers amount to 8,701 persons; 6,813 men and 1,888 youths. There are makers of handcuffs, of bits (577 men), curb-chains, stirrups, spurs, stoves, scuttles, fire-irons, fenders, gridirons, frying-pans, iron bedsteads, fire-proof boxes, tanks, skewers, hollow ware, ferules, bolts (506 men), of keys, handles, latches; of hinges (553 men), of rivets, currycombs, vices; of spindles (850 men), of swivels, of gas-meters, of screws (519 men, 236 youths, 667 women, 763 girls). The workers in steel manufactures are 1,160 men, 412 youths; there are 35 steel merchants; and of filemakers 4,400 men, 1,613 youths, 217 women, 94 girls. The blade forgers and makers are 1,579 men, cutlers 6,433, knife makers 1,152, fork makers 433, and a large proportion of youths and boys. In the manufacture of needles 4,727 persons are employed; namely, 1,896 men, 880 youths, 1,215 women, 736 girls. Besides 116 youths and 115 women and girls, 183 men are makers of fish-hooks. There are makers of scissors 894 men, awls and bodkins 255 men, of tuning forks, shears, phlemes, steel tags, a few; of makers of snuffers 130 men, scythes and sickles 677 men, shovels and spades 594, steel mills and coffee-mills 31, springs 385, razors 777, grinders 1,635 (of unspecified branches), sawsmiths 937 men. The steel-pen makers are 134 men, 74 youths, 652 women, 476 girls. Skates and harpoons have also special makers.

The workers in steel and iron supply the other classes with tools, weapons, and machines.

The class of workers in metals supply themselves and all other classes with the most important tools, weapons, and machines: the soldier with his sword, the sailor with his great guns, the surgeon with his sharp instruments, the writer with his pen, the musician with his instruments; the cook with her spits, grates, and pots; the barber with his razor, the tailor with his needle, the shoemaker with his awl; the railway service with engines and rails, the seaman with his anchor, the farmer with his plough, the agricultural labourer with his sickle and his scythe, the woodman with his axe, the gardener with his spade, the jockey with his spurs, the gamekeeper with his gun, the fisherman with his hooks, the engraver with his plates, the watchmaker with his fine-wrought materials, the coachmaker with his tools, the saddler with his awl and needle, the carpenter with his plane, the butcher with his knife, the sawyer with his saw, the turner with his lathe, the cooper with his adze; the spinner of silk, flax, or cotton, with his spindles and beautifully regulated machinery; the weaver with his shuttle, the miner with his pick, the workers in metals themselves with their hammers, files, vices, and lathes.

This rapid enumeration indicates how extensively all the arts of a country are affected by the iron and steel manufactures; and the immense importance of their rapid improvement and extension in Great Britain within the present century.

FIFTEENTH CLASS.
Sub-class 1:
Labourers and others.

The FIFTEENTH CLASS comprises a great number of men of the age of 20 years and upwards: of whom 312,669 are returned indefinitely as labourers; who undoubtedly include many agricultural labourers, many road labourers, many bricklayers' labourers, many dock labourers; and also many who are ready to work in any of the ordinary mechanical employments. "Mechanic," "shopman," and other equally indefinite terms, also designate 9,788 men. The class properly includes all the persons who have no fixed, definite employment, but are like the accensi of the Roman legions, ready to take the place of any man that falls out of the ranks in any of the lines of labour.

Sub-class 2:
Mechanics.

It will not, of course, be supposed that all the lawyers, all the medical men, all the merchants, all the manufacturers, all the shopkeepers, all the farmers, in the tables, are actually engaged in business, or, if professedly practising, are extensively employed. All these classes, as well as the labouring classes, have their accensi.

Fifteenth Class.

With this exception, the number of people that have no occupation in Great Britain is surprisingly small. The offices of a public and private nature, and the legitimate duties of the classes that possess the property realized, and that live on rents, dividends, and annuities, are much more numerous in England than in other countries; where the people take a less active part in the government, in the local administration, or in the management of public institutions and societies of various kinds.

Sixteenth Class. Persons of rank and property not classed elsewhere. Gentlemen. Gentlewomen. Annuitants.

Of persons of rank and property who are not referred to any office or occupation—10,604 are returned as gentlemen, or men of independent means, and 15,318 are gentlewomen; 23,032 men and 121,222 women are annuitants. These numbers are exclusive of persons under the age of 20.

Seventeenth Class. Persons supported by the community.

Sub-class 1: Persons living on income derived from voluntary sources and rates.

Sub-class 2: Criminal occupations.

Of the occupations of 157,402 persons—namely, 39,444 men, 84,412 women, 17,879 youths, and 15,667 girls under the age of 20—we have no further information than that they are chiefly supported by members of the community; as pensioners, as dependent relatives, as almspersons, as paupers, as lunatics, as prisoners; while others are vagrants in barns and tents.

The numbers in criminal occupations could only be procured with any approach to accuracy by the police, who were not called in to aid this inquiry; hence some will appear under their secondary occupations—for they have often two; and the rest with the occupations absolutely unascertained are in the last lines of the Table (54), embracing 60,603 men, 75,353 women.

Persons of no stated occupation.

Special abstracts of the occupations of paupers in workhouses, of prisoners in gaols, of lunatics in asylums, and of patients in hospitals, will be found in the Summary Tables, xliii–lxii; with other Tables of the blind, and of the deaf-and-dumb, who were specially returned.

These Tables are discussed in separate Sections (§ 5, 6).

The subjoined Table (41) gives a general view of the relative importance of the principal Occupations of the People, so far merely as it regards the number of persons employed in them.

Occupations in the order of the number of persons by whom they are followed.

§ 4. BIRTH-PLACE OF THE PEOPLE.

The distribution of the population over the islands of Great Britain has been already described, and it has been seen that certain general principles have been followed in "taking up the ground" in towns, in villages, and in detached dwellings.

Tables of Birthplace.

No attempt has been made to ascertain the number of the people of different races that can still be distinguished by their speech or by their characters; but an account has been taken of the town, or the parish and county, or the country of each person's birth; and from the returns the elaborate TABLES of the BIRTH-PLACES of the INHABITANTS of the several counties, towns, and districts which appear in this work, have been framed.*

What the tables show.

These tables are interesting, as they show the composition of the town and other communities; the intimate blending of people together who were born in town and in country; the concentration of people in every county, and almost in every district, who were born in other counties, as well as in other countries; and the migration that is constantly going on, and was directed in the last ten years, chiefly from the country to the towns, from Ireland to Scotland and to England, and from the United Kingdom to Canada, the United States, and Australia.

Foreigners in Great Britain.

72,637 persons were enumerated in Great Britain who were born at sea or in Foreign Parts; 3,198 having been born at sea, and 69,439 in different countries. Of the latter class 12,774 are declared to be British subjects, while 56,665 are the subjects of Foreign States: 50,289 of the foreigners are in England, 3,070 in Scotland, and 3,306 in the Islands of the British Seas.

British subjects abroad.

Official returns of 33,775 British subjects in fifteen foreign states, comprising 20,357 in France, 3,828 in Belgium, and 2,783 in Russia, will be found in the First Census Report †, where it is stated that no returns were obtained from many countries, comprising the whole of Germany, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Portugal, and the United States of America; so that there can be no doubt that, independently of the East Indies and the Colonies, the number of British subjects abroad who are not counted in the population, greatly exceeds the 56,665 foreigners that figure in our tables.

Birth-places of the British population.

The total population of Great Britain and the Islands in the British Seas is set down at 21,121,967; and if the soldiers and seamen abroad, of the army, Royal navy, and merchant service, are excluded, 20,959,477 inhabitants remain, whose birth-places are determined.

Among this number it is found that 17,234,490 were born in England and Wales; 2,754,360 were born in Scotland; 122,808 were born in the Islands of the British Seas; 733,866 were born in Ireland; and 41,316 were born in the British Colonies; 72,637 having been born abroad.

Above 82 per cent. of the people of Great Britain were born in England and Wales; 13 per cent. in Scotland; $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in Ireland; $\frac{6}{10}$ per cent. in the Islands of the British Seas; $\frac{2}{10}$ per cent. in the British Colonies: about $\frac{3}{10}$ per cent. are subjects of Foreign states: of the 17,927,609 inhabitants of England and Wales, 761,953 ($=4\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., or 1 in 24) were born beyond its limits; namely, 130,087 in Scotland, 13,753 in the Islands of the British Seas, and 519,959 in Ireland, and the rest elsewhere. About $\frac{7}{10}$ per cent. of the population of England and Wales were born in Scotland; 3 per cent. in Ireland:

* The column for the reception of the information in the English schedule was headed "where born;" and the instruction directed the Householder to write the name of the County and Town or Parish opposite to the names of those born in England, of the Country against the names of persons born in Scotland, Ireland, the British Colonies, the East Indies, or in Foreign Parts; of the latter class, "British Subjects" were to be distinguished. The Scotch Schedule was the same, except that the names of "Scotland" and "England" were transposed.

† First Census Report, 1851, p. xxiv.

Birth-places of the British population.

of the 2,888,742 inhabitants of Scotland, 266,022 (=9·2 per cent., or 1 in 11) were born beyond its borders; 46,791, or 1·6 per cent., in England and Wales; and 207,367, or 7 per cent., in Ireland.

The English in Scotland.

The Scotch in England.

As the population in Scotland is to the population in England and Wales nearly as 1 to $6\frac{1}{5}$, it is evident from the above numbers that the proportion of Englishmen in the population of Scotland (·016) is twice as great as the proportion of Scotchmen (·007) in the population of England. Upon the other hand, 130,087 Scotchmen had crossed the Tweed and entered England, while 46,791 Englishmen had passed the borders of Scotland; so that of every 100,000 persons born in England and Wales 271 were found in Scotland, while of every 100,000 persons born in Scotland 4,723 were enumerated in England; and the tendency of the people born in Scotland to enter England has hitherto been seventeen times as great as the tendency of the English to enter Scotland.

Irish in Scotland and England.

The stream of the Irish migration has flowed during the last ten years in a strong current towards Scotland, with a tendency proportional rather to what the native population of that great country should be than what it is; for of every 100 persons in Great Britain who were born in Ireland, 28 were living in Scotland, 71 in England.

Scottish, English, and Irish families.

It is observable of the Irish in England, and of the English in Scotland, that the proportion of young persons under 20 is to those of 20 and upwards as 34 and 45 to 100 respectively. Of the Scotch in England, the proportion of the young is much less, or only as 24 to 100; whence it is presumable, that the Scotch do not so frequently enter England in families as singly, and that Scotchmen, leaving their fair countrywomen behind them, marry English wives, under the English marriage law: to which no exception can be taken in England, as neither race thereby suffers any deterioration; but it is another proof, as it appears to us, that the women of Scotland have some right to complain of the working of the Scottish marriage law, which is not adapted to their present state of civilization.

Scottish immigrants.

The number of persons in England who were born in Scotland was 103,238 in 1841, and 130,087 in 1851; so that, to supply the place of those of them who have died in England, and to produce the increase, probably 50,000 of the people born in Scotland entered England in the ten years 1841–51. For the same reasons, about 17,000 persons born in England must have entered Scotland in the same time.

Irish immigrants.

The number of persons in Great Britain, who were born in Ireland, was 419,256 in 1841*, and 733,866 in 1851; the increase in the ten years has therefore been 314,610; and to supply the place of those of them who have died, and to constitute the increase, probably about 400,000 of the Irish population entered Great Britain in the 10 years 1841–1851.

Irish in Great Britain.

The children of Irish parents who in the ten years 1841–51 were born in England are counted among the English people, and therefore do not, in the Census of 1851, supply the loss by death of any of the original 419,256 who were returned as born in Ireland in 1841. But it is exceedingly probable that the Irish immigrants at least sustain their original numbers by births; consequently if we add those who entered Great Britain in the ten years 1841–51 to those who were already in the country in 1841, we have the number 819,256; which as they do not include the persons born here before 1841 of Irish parents, will not represent the whole of the Irish race in Great Britain. The same reasoning may be applied to the Scottish people in England, and to the English people in Scotland.

Male and female immigrants.

In 1841, of the English people in Scotland, 18,562 were males, and 19,234 were females; of the Scottish people in England and Wales, 60,704 were males, and 42,534 females; of the Irish people in Great Britain, 219,397 were males, and 199,859 were females. The respective numbers of the ages under and above 20 were not distinguished in 1841; but the proportional numbers of males and females support the conclusion that the Scotchwomen are forsaken in greater numbers than Englishwomen—by their countrymen. Male and female immigrants.

* See Preface to Enumeration Abstract, 1841, pp. 14–17.

Besides the migration exclusively to and from England, Scotland, Ireland, and the Islands in the British Seas, and the emigration to the colonies and to foreign parts, there is a constant emigration from house to house, parish to parish, town to town, and county to county. A certain number of the people are born, live, and die under the same roof: others migrate from the home in the detached house or village to the town, the county town, the manufacturing town, to London; from the small town in which they were born Migrations of various kinds.

The 42nd Table may be read thus:—Of the 20,959,477 Inhabitants of GREAT BRITAIN, of all ages, 17,234,490 were natives of ENGLAND and WALES, 2,754,360 natives of SCOTLAND, and so on. Of the 17,234,490 persons born in ENGLAND and WALES, resident in GREAT BRITAIN 17,165,656 were dwelling in ENGLAND and WALES, 46,791 in SCOTLAND, and 22,043 in the ISLANDS in the BRITISH SEAS.

The 43rd Table shows:—To 100,000 Inhabitants of GREAT BRITAIN the proportion born in ENGLAND and WALES, in SCOTLAND, and so on, and may be read thus:—Of every 100,000 Inhabitants of GREAT BRITAIN, 82,229 were natives of ENGLAND and WALES, 13,141 natives of SCOTLAND, and 586 natives of the ISLANDS in the BRITISH SEAS.

The 44th Table may be read thus:—Of every 100,000 persons who were BORN and enumerated in Great Britain, 85,535 were enumerated in England and Wales, 13,782 in Scotland, and 683 in the Islands in the British Seas; and of every 100,000 persons BORN in Scotland and enumerated in Great Britain, 4,723 were enumerated in ENGLAND and WALES, 95,221 in SCOTLAND, and 56 in the ISLANDS in the BRITISH SEAS.

Migrations of various kinds.

to another, to the county town, to the manufacturing town, or to London; from the birth-place in the county town to another, or to the manufacturing town, or to London; from one manufacturing town to another, or to London. And all these migrations may be reversed; or there may be, as a Danish writer has ingeniously suggested, a perpetual circulation of the constituent elements of the population through certain prescribed courses.

Migration of the populations of counties.

As there is scarcely a county, or town, or parish in which this movement of migration has not been observed, so there are few instances in which the influx and efflux of inhabitants have been equal. Thus in Cumberland 162,115 persons are enumerated who were born in the county and 33,377 persons who were born elsewhere; while it had sent out 39,680 natives of the county into other parts of England and Wales, where they were enumerated. For 201,795 of the people inhabiting England and Wales were born in Cumberland, which has a population of 195,492. Again, 1,653,206 of the people of England and Wales were born in Lancashire, while 2,031,236 people inhabit the county (proper); consequently the population of Lancashire exceeds by 378,030 the number of persons in England and Wales who were born in that county. 491,720 of the inhabitants of Devon were born in the county, and 112,799 persons who were born in Devon were enumerated among the inhabitants of other counties; so 81 per cent. of the people born in the county of Devon were found resident in that county, and 19 per cent. in other parts of England and Wales. And generally of 17,165,656 persons born in England and Wales, 13,691,914, or 80 per cent., were enumerated in the [Registration] county of their birth.

Counties that send out large numbers of their people.

Thus thirty counties have sent out numbers equal to their immigrants; and, in addition, the following numbers have been sent out: by Shropshire, 41,775; Wilts, 46,211; Hereford, 18,553; Suffolk, 47,231; Essex, 37,961; Norfolk, 39,237; Bucks, 18,873; Oxford, 18,322; Berks, 16,735; Dorset, 17,215; Somerset, 38,836; Hertford, 13,391; Northampton, 16,236; Derby, 19,573; Devon, 37,421; Cornwall, 22,425; Leicester, 14,235; Kent (exclusive of Greenwich, &c.), 20,898; and Lincoln, 12,287 people. The migration from the other counties is less considerable. The emigrants who leave England and Wales are not here brought into account.

Counties into which many people immigrate.

London and the manufacturing and mining counties receive large numbers of the above people; for London contains 673,916; Lancashire, 378,030; Durham, 65,024; Warwickshire, 50,335; Cheshire, 43,753; Monmouthshire, 38,138; Staffordshire, 39,128 persons more than the numbers born within their limits.

Birth-place of persons under 20 years of age, and of 20 years and upwards.

The full extent of the migration can only be shown by reference to the ages of the people; as it is certain that great numbers of those who during childhood and youth remain in their native place, leave it in after years. Accordingly, it will be observed that in all the tables, where the birth-places of those under 20, and of those at and above that age, are now for the first time distinguished*, the proportion of the adults who have immigrated in every district is much greater than the proportion of children and of young persons. This is particularly evident in the large towns.

The numbers who were born in London and in some of the principal towns of the kingdom have been ascertained; as well as the numbers who were born in the counties in which the towns are situated—in the rest of the country—in England, Scotland, and Ireland, and other parts; and will be found in an extended Table.*

The chief facts are shown below in a condensed form; where it will be observed that of the 6,589,048 inhabitants of London and of sixty-one English and ten Scotch towns, 3,598,891 are natives, and 2,990,157 are settlers who were born in other parts. But of the 3,767,626 persons of the age of 20 and upwards, only 1,477,949 were born in the towns, while 2,289,677 were born in other parts of the empire, or of the world.

Of the Irish in Great Britain the high proportion of 451,802 is found in these towns; which contain also 80,072 of the Scotch in England. Of persons born in Scotland, besides London,—Liverpool contains 14,059; Manchester and Salford, 6,551; Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 5,745; Carlisle, 2,372. Of persons born in Ireland, Liverpool contains 83,813; Manchester and Salford, 52,504; Birmingham, 9,341; Leeds, 8,466; Bradford, 9,279; Stockport, 5,701; Bristol, 4,761. In Portsmouth, Plymouth, Wolverhampton, Nottingham, Chester, Macclesfield, Bolton, Preston, Halifax, Sheffield, Hull, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Sunderland, Gateshead, Carlisle, Merthyr Tydfil, Newport, and Swansea, the Irish have also settled in considerable numbers.

Birth-places of the people of London.

London contains natives of every county of England and Wales, of every part of the United Kingdom, and of all the principal countries of the world. The precise numbers of persons that were born in the different places will be found in the tables; we shall here state the general facts in thousands.

The population consists of 2,362,000; 967,000 being under the age of 20, and 1,395,000 of the age of 20 and upwards; 812,000 of the 967,000 under the age of 20 were born in London, and the greater part of the 967,000 are the children of the rest, and may, for the moment, be left out of consideration.

Of the persons of the age of 20 and upwards, 645,000 were born in London, 588,000 were born in other parts of England, 14,000 in Wales, 26,000 in Scotland, 1,600 in the Islands of the British Seas, 89,000 in Ireland, 7,000 in the British Colonies, 24,000 in Foreign parts, and 526 were born at sea. Still confining our statement to men and women of the age of 20 and upwards, every English county has contributed its quota to the population of the metropolis of the empire. Middlesex sent 514,000; Surrey, 149,000; Kent, 89,000; or the three counties in which London stands, 752,000; Sussex, 23,000; Hants, 29,000; Berks, 20,000; Herts, 20,000; Bucks, 15,000; Oxford, 14,000; Northampton, 9,000; Hunts, 3,000; Bedford, 7,000; Cambridge, 9,000; Essex, which adjoins London, 48,000; Suffolk, 28,000; Norfolk, 28,000; Wilts, 18,000; Dorset, 9,000; Devon, 32,000; Cornwall, 8,000; Somerset, 28,000; Gloucester, 19,000; Hereford, 6,000; Salop, 7,000; Stafford, 7,000; Worcester, 7,000; Warwick, 13,000; Leicester, 5,000; Rutland, 1,000; Lincoln, 9,000; Notts, 5,000; Derby, 4,000; Cheshire, 3,000; Lancaster, 11,000; York, 21,000; Durham, 5,000; Northumberland, 6,000; Cumberland, 2,500; Westmorland, 1,000; Monmouth, 1,600. Only 645,000 men and women would be left in London, if the 750,000 recruits marched back to their homes.

Contributories to London.

The number of contributories from the several counties is regulated by their population, the proximity to London, facility of access, absence or presence near home of manufactories, or other centres of attraction. Thus Devon is a larger county than Wilts, and sent absolutely more people of the age of 20 and upwards to London, but relatively it sent less, as to every 10,000 born in Devon 908 were in London, while to every 10,000 born in Wilts 1,039 were in London. Cornwall and Stafford send few people to London, as the population is actively employed at home in occupations entirely unlike the occupations of the people of London. Generally the disposition "to go to London" is greatest in the counties immediately around London, in the counties south of the Thames, in the south midland, and in the eastern counties—in the population of the old Saxon counties. The people to the north of Nottingham and Leicester are less inclined to go to London; and the counties of Leicester, Rutland, Lincoln, Notts, Derby, Chester, Lancaster, York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, contain

The north of England.

3,160,000 people of the age of 20 and upwards, contributed only 73,000 to the 1,395,000 of the same age in London; or less than Kent alone. It will be recollected that in the early history of the country a disposition existed to separate action in the north of England; and there is still a tendency, which is strengthened by the occupations, to resort to the great central towns of Yorkshire and Lancashire rather than to London.

Interesting tables.

Two curious Tables show the tendency of the inhabitants of every county (1) "to go to London," and (2) to settle in their own or (3) in other counties. Another table shows the constituent population of London and of every county —that has been contributed by the other counties of England, by Wales, Scotland, and Ireland.*

Of the 1,457,000 people in London who were born within its limits, 812,000 are under 20 years of age, and 645,000 are of the age of 20 and upwards; or the proportion under the age of twenty is to the rest as 126 to 100; nearly as 25 to 20.

Ages of the natives of London, and of the Advenæ.

Of the 906,000 immigrants, 156,000 are under the age of 20 years, and 750,000 are of the age of 20 and upwards. The proportion under 20 is 21 to 100 above, or nearly 4 to 20. According as the immigrants are from this or that county, the proportions vary from 1 under the age of 20, to as many as 6 and 7, and even 10, of that age and upwards.

Scotch, Irish, and Foreigners in London.

30,401 of the inhabitants of London, of all ages, were born in Scotland; 2,211 in the Islands in the British Seas; 108,548 in Ireland; 11,136 in the British Colonies; namely, 710 in Gibraltar; 347 in Malta and the Ionian Islands; 4,095 in the East Indies; 111 in Ceylon; 104 in the Mauritius; and 24 in the other Asiatic colonies; 562 in the Cape of Good Hope and on the coast of Africa; 1,616 in Canada; 2,803 in the West Indies; 452 in Australia; 33 in New Zealand. Of the 29,352 persons in London who were born in Foreign States, 10,237 were born in Germany, of whom 671 are British subjects, 9,566 are Germans; 7,217 were born in France, of whom 1,334 are British subjects, 5,883 are French. Belgium has sent 703 of her people to London; Holland, 1,930; Denmark, 292; Norway, 322; Sweden, 335; Russia, 1,169; Persia, 7; China, 78; Arabia, 10; Egypt, 62. Switzerland has sent 835 natives to London; Spain, 564; Portugal, 376; Italy, 1,604; Greece, 177; Turkey, 139. From America, the United States sent 1,054 citizens; Mexico, 30; Brazil, 45.†

Natural increase of population, by births.

Upon comparing the actual increase in the population of each county with the numbers by which the births exceeded the deaths, in the ten years 1841–51, the proportion of the increase that is due to natural causes and immigration is apparent. Thus the births that were registered in London exceeded the deaths by 144,688; while the increase of numbers in the same time, as shown by the Censuses, was 413,819; so that, had all the births been registered, 269,131 of the latter numbers must have been referable to immigration. In Lancashire and Cheshire the increase by births was 218,443; by immigration, 205,375. In Sussex, Hants, and Bedford a small portion of the increase was due in the ten years to immigration, and a much larger proportion in the counties of Stafford, Worcester, Warwick, the West and the East Ridings of York, Durham, Northumberland, Monmouth, and South Wales. The other counties, if we may borrow a phrase from Natural History, send out swarms of their population every year. Thus the births in the Eastern Counties were 118,574 in the ten years; the increase, as determined by the Census, was 73,366; so that 4,521 of the youth of Norfolk, Suffolk, and Essex leave their native counties every year to reap elsewhere the fruits of the education, skill, and vigour which they have derived, at great expense*, from their parents at home. The district in which they labour is the district in which they contribute directly or indirectly to the poor rate; and in it they should receive relief.

A free circulation of the people is now necessary in Great Britain, to meet the varying requirements of the Public Industry.

Such is a brief digest of the answers which have been received from the inhabitants of Great Britain to the question: "Where were you born?"

Separation of families by migration.

The separation of families which is inevitable in a population like that of Great Britain is in some respects painful; but the facilities of travelling, of meeting, and of intercourse by letters, have happily increased faster than the population, so as to mitigate the evil; and the whole of the inhabitants will gradually grow acquainted with the different parts of their native land, to which, as well as to the town or village of their birth, it is desirable that the people of the United Kingdom should be attached.

Future birth-places of the British population.

Hitherto the population has migrated from the high or the comparatively healthy ground of the country to the cities and seaport towns, in which few families have lived for two generations. But it is evident that henceforward the great cities will not be like camps—or the fields on which the people of other places exercise their energies and industry—but the birth-places of a large part of the British race.

About seventy-seven thousand children are born in London annually. Such arrangements of the houses, and of the squares and open spaces, should therefore be progressively made, as it is known, by experience, are conducive to the health, vigour, and efficient training of children. Facilities for the distribution over wider areas, and for the periodical concentration of the town population, can be made by the agency of the railways; and as the working people go and return to the shops at regular hours, they may evidently be conveyed at as little cost as any kind of merchandise; and thus we may hope that the worst of all Birth-places—the crowded room, or the house of many families—will never be the Birth-place of any considerable portion of the British population.

§ 5. THE BLIND AND THE DEAF-AND-DUMB.

An inquiry into the numbers of the Blind and of the Deaf-and-Dumb in Great Britain was instituted for the first time at the Census of 1851. Notwithstanding the great interest attaching to these classes, both in a social and a physiological point of view, the statistics of blindness and deaf-muteism in this country have not hitherto advanced beyond estimates and conjectures founded chiefly upon returns obtained in foreign states, or the limited experience of a few public institutions. Great disadvantages have resulted from this entire absence of authentic information, not only to society at large, but more especially to these afflicted persons, on whose behalf the appeals and efforts of philanthropy, unsupported by a reference to facts illustrative of their numbers and condition, have lost much of their intended effect.† As instruction can only be conveyed through the senses, no deprivation can be sustained productive of so many disadvantages and evils as the want of the faculty of sight or (combined with loss of speech) of hearing. With either of these principal inlets to knowledge closed, the mind without a special course of training, must remain undeveloped, and continue darkened by the absence of proper moral perceptions and useful information. The details afforded in the accompanying Tables will, it is hoped, assist in moving the further sympathy of the benevolent towards these unfortunate persons; although, indeed, their very helpless position—dependent for everything, as they are, mainly upon the good offices of others, and unable to support themselves in most of the ordinary employments of life—should of itself prove a sufficient incentive to exertions having in view the alleviation of their unhappy lot.

Condition of the Blind and Deaf-and-Dumb.

* The present value of the future earnings of an agricultural labourer in Norfolk is about 482*l.* at the age of 20; the present value of his subsistence from that age is 248*l.*; leaving 234*l.* as the net value of his services. Consequently the 4,521 emigrants of this class carry away a large amount of capital which they have acquired in their native counties.

† In consequence of the representations on this subject made at the Census Office by societies interested in the Blind and in the Deaf-and-Dumb, early information was afforded to them with respect to the number and distribution of these classes throughout the country.

Mode of obtaining information.

Before noticing the chief results of the inquiry, it may be proper to state the mode in which the information was acquired. The plan adopted was the very simple one of including in the "Householder's Schedule", left at every house to be filled up with the required particulars relating to its inmates, a column in which was to be written the word "Blind" or "Deaf-and-Dumb" against the name of any member of the family so afflicted. In the performance of his duties, the enumerator was required to use the utmost care to prevent omissions, and when such were detected he was to supply the defective information, either from his own knowledge or the statements of credible persons, as far as he might be able. Owing to the difficulty of ascertaining the existence of dumbness in extreme infancy, the number of cases returned under that head must necessarily be slightly deficient; but as no motives are apparent to induce an intentional suppression of facts usually well known beyond the limits of the household, it may be presumed that the returns of the Blind and Deaf-and-Dumb, although subject, in common with the other branches of the inquiry, to accidental omissions, are on the whole tolerably complete.

It was not thought desirable to divert the attention of the persons making and collecting the Census returns from the great and essential points of the general enumeration by any attempt to obtain, with respect to these special classes, information as to the circumstances of their affliction—such as whether it was congenital or acquired; nor was it found practicable at a later period to enter upon a further investigation of the cases in reference to these and other questions of undoubted interest. In Ireland, the Census Commissioners had fortunately no difficulty in pursuing the subject to its full extent. By means of that admirably organized body, the Constabulary force, and eminently aided by the experience of the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Wilde, who has paid great attention to the subject, they were enabled successfully to follow up each case; and they have embodied the results in a Report, recently presented to Parliament, which forms an extremely valuable contribution on a branch of vital statistics hitherto comparatively unexplored.*

Extended inquiries of Mr. Wilde.

i. The Blind.

In Great Britain and the Islands of the British Seas there are 21,487 persons—11,273 males and 10,214 females—returned as totally blind. The number in England and Wales is 18,306 of both sexes; in Scotland, 3,010; and in the Islands of the British Seas, 171 persons. These numbers furnish a proportion relatively to the whole population of 1 blind in every 975 persons in Great Britain, 1 in every 979 in England and Wales, 1 in 960 in Scotland, and 1 in 837 in the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man. (See Table 47.)

Statistics of Blindness in other countries.

These results admit of favourable comparison with the relative numbers in Ireland, which, according to the Census, are 1 in every 864 inhabitants. In the level portions of Europe, comprising Belgium, Hanover, parts of Germany, and the plains of Lombardy and Denmark, the proportion is stated to be 1 blind in every 950 inhabitants—but slightly differing from the average of Great Britain. In more elevated regions the proportion is considerably lower; but in Norway it is found to be 1 in every 482 inhabitants.*

Distribution of the Blind over Great Britain.

In reviewing the distribution of the Blind over the different parts of Great Britain, it should be remembered that the institutions which have been established for the reception and instruction of persons deprived of sight are located in the principal cities and towns. Where, however, the towns are very large, the inmates of these establishments only slightly affect the proportion which the Blind bear to the general population. Thus in London, notwithstanding the number of cases brought from other parts, the proportion is 1 blind in every 1,025 inhabitants. Other large towns present the following results:—

Blindness in towns and in rural districts.

Manchester - -	1 blind	in every	1,107	inhabitants.
Liverpool - -	1	„	„	999	„
Birmingham - -	1	„	„	1,181	„
Leeds - - -	1	„	„	1,203	„
Sheffield - -	1	„	„	1,141	„

It has been generally considered, and is no doubt to a certain extent true, that crowded dwellings and other circumstances attendant upon dense populations, by inducing diseases of the organs of sight, have caused a greater amount of blindness in towns than in rural localities. It has also been thought that blindness has been increased by many of the employments followed in populous manufacturing towns. But whatever may be the influences prevailing in towns, it is clear from the returns that a much larger proportion of blind persons is found in agricultural than in manufacturing and mining counties. For example, in Wilts, Dorset, Devon, Cornwall, and Somerset there is an average of 1 blind in every 758 inhabitants; in Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk, 1 in 888; and in the northern counties of Scotland, which include the Highlands, 1 in 823. The highest proportion, 1 in 665, is observed in Herefordshire.

In striking contrast with these are the following manufacturing or mining counties:—

Yorkshire, West Riding -	1 blind	in every	1,231	inhabitants.
Cheshire and Lancashire -	1	„	„	1,167	„
Durham - - -	1	„	„	1,163	„
Staffordshire - -	1	„	„	1,082	„

Blindness influenced by age.

Conclusions unfavourable to the rural districts should not, however, be deduced from a mere comparison of the proportion of the Blind to the population living at all ages. Blindness is a common infirmity of extreme old age, and an examination of the ages of the Blind shows that nearly one-half of the persons deprived of sight are above 60 years of age. It follows, therefore, that in those localities in which the largest numbers of old men and women are living, the largest proportion of the Blind will be found. In the great seats of manufacturing industry the population generally is much younger than in most of the agricultural counties, where, as shown in a former section of this Report, persons in large numbers, and especially females, are living, in circumstances favourable to longevity, at very advanced ages. Thus, in the counties presenting the highest and lowest proportions of blind persons, the influence of age is sufficiently apparent:—

* Census of Ireland.—Report on the Status of Disease, p. 41.

The proportion of the Blind aged 60 and upwards to the persons living who have attained that age, shows how close a connexion exists between blindness and advanced years:—

Ages of the Blind.

So, in other counties, according to the proportion of old and young persons living, a greater or less amount of blindness is generally observed. But, while the question of age is of great importance in investigating the distribution of blindness, it will not explain all the variations presented in the returns, as in some localities other influences are doubtless at work.

In the early years of life the numbers of the Blind are not large. Of the 21,487 blind persons in Great Britain, only 2,929, or less than 14 per cent., are under 20 years of age—a circumstance tending to show that cases of blindness at birth are not very common. Between 20 and 60 years of age there are 8,456 persons, or about 39 per cent. of the whole number; while 10,102 persons, or 47 per cent., are at the advanced ages above 60. These facts point to the conclusion that blindness in many cases may have arisen as a natural infirmity attendant upon old age, and also show the great longevity of the Blind, notwithstanding the accidents to which they are liable.

The following comparison of the ages of blind persons in four Divisions of England, each containing nearly the same number of cases, exhibits variations for which an explanation may probably be found in the circumstances of the different localities:—

Of the persons in Great Britain returned as blind 11,273 are males and 10,214 females. Accidents and diseases resulting in loss of sight are more likely to arise in the employments followed by males than in those of females. The proportions are 110 males to 100 females in Great Britain, and 113 males to 100 females in England and Wales. In Scotland the females returned differ but slightly from the males, a result probably traceable to the preponderance of aged women in that country. Compared with the general population, we find to every 10,000 living in Great Britain 11·0 males and 9·5 females blind. In England the proportion is nearly the same. To every 10,000 inhabitants of Scotland there are 10·7 males and 10·2 females blind. The males generally exceed the females until 70 years of age is attained; from that period of life the blind women are much more numerous. The disproportion of females at all ages is greatest in Monmouthshire, Devon, Cornwall, Hereford, and Huntingdon. The Irish returns show a proportion of the sexes the converse of that observed in Great Britain, namely, 111 females to 100 males.

Occupations of the Blind.

The returns do not admit of a rigid distinction between the employments followed by the Blind and those subsequently acquired by them. Instances are common of blind persons being engaged in pursuits apparently quite incompatible with loss of vision. The employments taught in the institutions for the Blind are usually basket-making, sack and net making, knitting, and music. Most of the other occupations detailed in the Tables must be regarded as those followed previous to blindness.

The present or previous occupations of the Blind have been classified in Tables for each sex, distinguishing the ages in quinquennial periods.* This affliction, it will be seen, i not confined hiefly to particular classes and trades, but exists amongst all ranks, and in a great variety of employments. None of the great branches of manufacturing industry seem to be peculiarly liable to it; indeed the small numbers returned against cotton, linen, silk, woollen-cloth, iron, and earthenware are remarkable, when the immense amount of labour employed in these manufactures is considered. Factory workers are, however, mostly young persons; and none would be employed in the midst of machinery with any defect of vision.

Amongst the items which present the largest numbers in the classification of employments are Agricultural Labourers, of whom there are 907; Labourers not otherwise described, 512; Chelsea Pensioners and Soldiers, 586; Greenwich Pensioners, 70; Farmers, 505; Domestic Servants (chiefly females), 438; Weavers, 295; Coal-miners, 195; Copper and Lead miners, 68; Stone and Limestone quarriers, 51. Of the class described as "Annuitants" and "Living on Alms" there are 1,062; and 2,833 blind Paupers are returned in workhouses without any statement as to previous occupation. Of the Blind following employments presumed to have been acquired after loss of sight there are—musicians and teachers of music, 535; mat, sacking, and net makers, 127; and knitters, 92. With respect to 2,853 males and 5,960 females, no returns respecting their actual or previous pursuits are made.

Inadequacy of provision for instruction and support of the Blind.

Benevolent persons, impressed with the forlorn condition of the Blind belonging to the labouring classes, have urged the necessity for some provision by the State for their instruction and protection. The present inquiry, besides showing how widely the Blind and the Deaf-and-Dumb are scattered over the country, insomuch that there is scarcely a District in England without persons of both these unfortunate classes amongst the poor, also divulges the fact that there is no adequate provision for their instruction when young, or any asylum but the workhouse for their sustenance in age. Of the Blind, there are in workhouses 2,833, as already stated, undescribed, besides many more entered under their former pursuits; while less than 1,000 are returned in schools and other public institutions.

* See Summary Tables, pp. cccii–cccix.

ii. The Deaf-and-Dumb.

The information obtained at the Census with respect to the Deaf-and-Dumb does not seem to call for any introductory remarks on the various physiological questions affecting this class of persons; we proceed, therefore, briefly to notice some of the principal facts presented in the Tables, in relation to their numbers, distribution, sex, and age.

Deaf-dumbness in Great Britain.

In Great Britain 12,553 persons (6,884 males and 5,669 females) are returned as Deaf-and-Dumb. Of this number, 10,314 are in England, 2,155 in Scotland, and 84 in the Islands in the British Seas. The subjoined Table (51) shows the proportion which the Deaf-and-Dumb bear to the general population, and from it we learn that in Great Britain 1 in every 1,670 inhabitants is a Deaf-mute, in England 1 in 1,738, in Scotland 1 in 1,340, and in the Islands 1 in 1,704. These numbers and proportions would be slightly increased if allowance were made for the omission of infants, with respect to whom, owing to the difficulty of ascertaining the existence of deafness and consequent muteism* in the first years of life, the returns are unavoidably imperfect. The above numbers will therefore be received as an under-statement of the actual state of Deaf-dumbness. But as the same defect of necessity exists in the returns of other countries, no erroneous conclusions will be formed from using them for the purposes of comparison.

Proportion of the Deaf-and-Dumb to the population.

Deaf-dumbness in other countries.

According to the most recent returns, the average proportion of the Deaf-and-Dumb to the population of Europe generally is found to be 1 in every 1,593 persons. In Holland, Belgium, and other states presenting chiefly a flat surface, the proportion is much smaller than in Norway and Switzerland; indeed, in some of the Swiss cantons, where cretinism is prevalent amongst the mountain passes, there is 1 Deaf-mute in every 206 inhabitants. In Ireland, the average is 1 in 1,380 persons; and in the United States of America, where, however, the returns are admitted to be very defective, 1 in 2,366.†

Distribution of the Deaf-and-Dumb over Great Britain.

Looking at the distribution of the Deaf-and-Dumb over the face of Great Britain, we find them to be more common in the agricultural and pastoral districts, especially where the country is hilly, than in those containing a large amount of town population. The Northern Counties of Scotland, which include the wild and mountainous region of the Highlands, present the highest average,—1 in 1,156 of the population; then the South-Western Division of England, with 1 in 1,393; followed by the Southern Counties of Scotland, 1 in 1,480; and the Welsh Division, 1 in 1,542. We have already seen that the South-Western and Welsh Divisions of England and the Northern Counties of Scotland contain the largest proportional number of blind persons.

* The want of the sense of hearing in infants, or indeed in children at any age under two years, by depriving them of the power of acquiring language, necessarily causes total or partial Dumbness. In later life, when speech has been acquired, Deafness is attended with much less inconvenience.

† Census of the United States for 1850. Census of Ireland, 1851.—Status of Disease.

Cretins, most of whom are deaf-mutes, are found in some of these localities; the disease of cretinism is also accompanied by mental imbecility in a greater or less degree.

The proportion of Deaf-mutes is lowest in the Northern Division of England —1 in 2,058 inhabitants; and in the North-Western Division (Cheshire and Lancashire), where a nearly similar average prevails—1 in 2,014.

Although as a general principle a greater degree of prevalency of Deaf-dumbness seems to exist in rural and hilly localities than amidst urban and manufacturing populations, yet exceptions are remarked on applying this test to the counties, and the smaller sub-divisions composing them. The following English counties, for example, present widely different results, scarcely to be explained by a reference to their physical or geographical peculiarities:—

Yorkshire, East Riding	1	Deaf-and-Dumb	in every	2,231	inhabitants.
Monmouthshire	1	„	„	2,300	„

Deaf-and-Dumb of both sexes.

The relative numbers of the sexes are in all countries much more disproportionate amongst the Deaf-and-Dumb than amongst the Blind. In Great Britain and in England and Wales there are 121 male Deaf-mutes to 100 females; in Scotland the inequality is somewhat greater, namely, 125 males to 100 females; in the Islands in the British Seas there are 121 males to 100 females. The Irish Returns give the reversed proportion of 111 females to 100 males.

In every 10,000 of the general population of each sex in Great Britain, 6·7 males and 5·3 females are Deaf-and-Dumb. But while the returns for the whole country exhibit a larger proportion of males, the reverse obtains in some localities; thus in Berks, Bedford, Salop, Derby, and Monmouth, more females are returned than males relatively to the numbers living of each sex.

Ages of the Deaf-and-Dumb.

An examination of the ages of the Deaf-and-Dumb presents results the opposite of those indicated by the Tables relating to the Blind. It has been shown that blindness is found chiefly in persons in advanced life,—47 per cent. of the Blind being upwards of 60 years of age,—and to a small extent amongst young persons.

The subjoined Table (52) exhibits the proportions which the Deaf-and-Dumb and the Blind bear to the male and female population living at different ages in England and Wales. It will be seen that of the Deaf-and-Dumb the highest proportions exist at the periods of age ranging between 5 and 25 years, —the numbers gradually diminishing as the ages advance. The Blind, on the other hand, increase at each period from infancy to old age,—after 55 very rapidly, and nearly in the same ratio as the general mortality.

Of the 12,553 Deaf-mutes, only 783, or 6·2 per cent., had reached 60 years of age,—a fact showing the unfavourable position of this class as regards length of life; while those under 20 years of age, although the numbers are unquestionably deficient, amounted to 47 per cent. The incompleteness of the returns for the years of early life, arising from the uncertainty which must exist with respect to infants, and the natural indisposition of parents to form a painful conclusion on the subject while the slightest grounds for doubt exist, has already been adverted to. A rough estimate of the omissions from this cause may be made by assuming the Deaf-mutes under 5 years of age to bear the same proportion to the general population of the same age as the persons aged 5 years and upwards bear to the residue of the population. There were in Great Britain, of 5 years of age and upwards, 18,222,518 persons, of whom 11,993 were Deaf-and-Dumb. If a like proportion existed amongst the population under 5 years of age (2,736,959 persons), 1,801 Deaf-mutes, instead of 560, would have been returned under the first quinquennial period of age. The addition of 1,241 cases would raise the percentage of those under 20 years of age to 52, and lower that of the ages above 20 to 48; but as the omissions would not be so frequent in the fourth and fifth years of age as in the earlier years, the supposed number to be added is probably too large.

Omissions of infants.

In London a larger proportion is observed between 5 and 15 years of age than elsewhere,—a circumstance attributable to the institutions for the Deaf-and-Dumb established in the metropolis. Throughout the country, however, a very small number, scarcely more than 1,100, were returned as inmates of schools or asylums; and when it is remembered that even partial instruction can be imparted to persons in their condition only by a special course of training, and then with great difficulty, the inadequacy of the existing provision for their education will be apparent. Without careful instruction, the Deaf-mute is sometimes highly dangerous to society.

Inadequacy of provision for instruction of the Deaf-and-Dumb.

§ 6.—PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS.—INMATES OF WORKHOUSES, PRISONS, LUNATIC ASYLUMS, AND HOSPITALS.

One of the most unerring tests of the civilization of a State is to be found in its Public Institutions. A stranger arriving in a country where the most conspicuous objects consisted of edifices for religious worship, schools and colleges for the education of the young, almshouses and asylums for the aged or the helpless, workhouses for the poor, hospitals for the sick, barracks for the soldiery, and prisons for the custody of offenders, would be at no loss in coming to the conclusion that he was in the midst of a highly civilized and enlightened community. In Great Britain, although doubtless much remains to be done for some classes having strong claims upon the public sympathies, institutions of almost every description which a complete social organization and a large amount of public benevolence can suggest are found, not only in the capital, but in nearly all the principal cities and towns, and also, as far as circumstances will permit, over the surface of the country.

With respect to churches and other places of worship, and to schools, the particulars of their number, nature, and extent of accommodation, will be found in the Abstracts of the Census of Religious Worship and of Education recently laid before Parliament. Detailed Tables relating to the Inmates of Workhouses, Prisons, Lunatic Asylums, and Hospitals are given in the present publication*, and call for a few comments. The military in barracks are included in the tabular statements of the Army generally, already noticed.

Expenditure on the Relief of the Poor.

The large provision that is made in this country for the poor is shown by the fact that 4,962,704*l.* were expended on their relief in England and Wales in the year ended 25th March 1851; and 535,944*l.* in Scotland in the year ended 14th May 1851. In Scotland the change from voluntary contribution for the relief of the poor to legal assessment under the new Poor Law Act is only now in progress; the amount levied for poor rates represents, therefore, but a portion of the sum expended on the poor of that part of Great Britain.

According to the returns of the Poor Law Board, the number of paupers in receipt of relief, both in-door and out-door, in England and Wales, was 862,827 on 1st January 1851, and 813,089 on 1st July 1851. At the time of the Census 126,488 paupers were inmates of workhouses in England and Wales, being in the proportion of one in-door pauper to every 142 inhabitants, or 7 in every 1,000. Out-door paupers are often in receipt of relief for very short periods on account of sickness or temporary distress; but those received into the workhouses are for the most part supported for long periods—frequently for the remainder of their days.

The highest proportion of in-door paupers to the general population is observed in Surrey and Middlesex (Extra-Metropolitan)—the pauper children belonging to several of the London parishes being placed out in establishments situated in those counties—in Kent and the other counties surrounding the metropolis, and in Suffolk, Norfolk, and Wilts. Advancing towards the north, we find the proportion considerably reduced; but it is lowest of all in Yorkshire, where only 1 in-door pauper is returned in every 330 inhabitants. In this county, however, there are five unions without workhouses, out-door relief only being given. In Wales, ten unions, and in Devonshire, Cornwall, and Cheshire, two unions in each, were also without workhouses.

In Scotland the number of poor on the relief register on 14th May 1851 was 76,906. At the Census there were 5,438 in-door paupers, chiefly in the southern counties, where poorhouses have been established by means of funds raised by rate in many parishes; while in the northern counties the progress of the new system of legal assessment has been but partial.

Sexes of in-door paupers.

The relative numbers of the sexes of in-door paupers do not, on the whole, differ greatly. In England, 64,294 are males, and 62,194 females; in Scotland, the females are most numerous, being 3,239 to 2,199 males. To every 10,000 males and females respectively living in Great Britain there are 65 males and 61 females in workhouses.

Ages and occupations of in-door paupers. See Summary Tables XLVII. to L.

The occupations of the in-door paupers are now given in Tables showing the numbers at each quinquennial period of age. The statements rest upon the authority of the masters of workhouses, who by the Census Act were appointed enumerators for those institutions. Almost every branch of employment,— professional, commercial, agricultural, manufacturing,—is represented, and the returns include some large numbers of particular classes. Of agricultural and other labourers there are 17,700, of whom 8,113 appear at the ages above 60; domestic servants, 15,036, all but 679 of whom are females, and a large proportion in advanced life,—a fact which points significantly to the want of a suitable provision for this class when worn out or otherwise incapacitated for service; charwomen, 2,001; washerwomen, 1,799; milliners and dress-makers, 2,464; shoemakers, 1,901; tailors, 1,022. A large number, 70,943—of whom 50,197 are under 15 years of age—is returned without any specific statement as to their occupations. In the workhouses are found some of the oldest people in the country; 18,489 in-door paupers are upwards of 70 years of age, including 360 aged 90 and upwards.

* A statement of the number of inmates of Workhouses, Prisons, Lunatic Asylums, and Hospitals was given in the First Report, p. exxx. The numbers shown in the present publication, which are made up from information obtained in connexion with the further investigation of the subject, represent more accurately the inmates of those institutions.

ii. Prisoners.

The valuable statistics of crime in Great Britain presented in the Criminal Returns prepared at the Home Office furnish a digest of the nature of the offences, the number of offenders, and the result of the proceedings in each year. At the Census, information was obtained which enables us to state the numbers confined on a particular day, with their ages and occupations—points of much interest, as supplemental to those embraced in Mr. Redgrave's Tables.

The total number of persons in the different prisons, bridewells, convict depôts, and hulks in Great Britain on the 31st March 1851 was 26,855; 22,451 males and 4,404 females. Of these some were debtors, others were untried; but the majority were convicted and undergoing sentence. The proportion of prisoners is therefore 1 in 785 of the general population. Owing partly to the Government convict establishments and the hulks, the proportion is higher in England than in Scotland; and in London, Hampshire, and other localities it for the same reason exceeds the average of England.

Proportion of prisoner to the population.

To every 10,000 males and 10,000 females in Great Britain there are respectively 22 males and 4 females confined in prisons. In London the proportions are as high as 45 males and 9 females, while in the Welsh division they are only 6·8 males and 1·7 females in 10,000.

Prisoners of both sexes.

According to the Criminal Returns, the number of persons committed in Great Britain in 1851 was 31,961,—25,283 males and 6,678 females. In Scotland the committals of females are proportionately more numerous than in England.

Committa's.

With respect to the ages of prisoners, it appears that 6,833, or 25 per cent. of the whole number, are under 20 years of age, while 134 are aged 70 and upwards. The returns of occupation present a great variety of items, and will doubtless be examined with attention by all interested in the various questions affecting the criminal class which have proved so difficult of solution both to the statesman and the philanthropist. Amongst the employments furnishing the largest numbers are,—agricultural labourers, 3,026; labourers not particularly described, 5,062; domestic servants, 1,174, of whom 220 are males and 954 females; shoemakers, 891; tailors, 533; hawkers and itinerant vendors, 614; engaged in the cotton manufacture, 694; carpenters, bricklayers, masons, slaters, plasterers, and plumbers, together, 1,381. The occupations of 24,189 prisoners are described; the residue, we presume, represents the incarcerated class of professional criminals.

Ages and occupations of prisoners.

See Summary Tables, LI. to LIV.

iii. Inmates of Lunatic Asylums.

By the wise interference of the State, protection has been secured to the persons and property of the insane in this country. The public and private establishments for the insane are subject to definite regulations, enforced by the inspection and control of the proper authorities; the number of patients is restricted within the limits of the accommodation afforded, and every private asylum is duly licensed. The physiology of mental disease has likewise engaged the attention of eminent medical men, and generally a gentle and humane treatment has been successfully adopted, in the place of harshness and unnecessary restraint.

Number of lunatics in asylums.

At the period of the Census there were in the various lunatic asylums and other institutions for the reception of the insane in Great Britain, 18,803 persons; 8,999 males, and 9,804 females. Lunatic paupers in the insane wards of workhouses are not included, as they are not usually distinguished from other paupers in the returns. By the establishment of County Lunatic Asylums, however, the number of insane and fatuous paupers in workhouses has been greatly reduced.

Proportion of lunatics to the population.

The proportion which the lunatics in asylums bear to the general population is 1 in every 1,115 inhabitants in Great Britain. To every 10,000 males and 10,000 females living there were 8·8 males and 9·1 females in these institutions.

Ages and occupations of lunatics. See Summary Tables, LV. to LVIII.

The former occupations of lunatics, in combination with their ages, are returned in the Tables, and will be examined with interest. It will be seen that the educated and professional classes furnish many cases of insanity: of clergymen and ministers, 84 are returned; barristers and solicitors, 88; physicians and surgeons, 108; officers of the army and navy, 95; the East India service, 118; schoolmasters and teachers, 258. Amongst the largest items are, labourers, 1,794; female domestic servants, 1,753; shoemakers, 364; weavers, 240; and tailors, 224. No information is given as to the employments, if any, of 7,674 lunatics of all ages.

iv. Patients in Hospitals for the Sick.

Although of late years additional hospital accommodation has been provided in towns, it may be doubted whether the habits and feelings of the people of this country render necessary an extended provision, independent of the poor law system, for the reception and care of the sick. In the principal cities and towns, hospitals and infirmaries, supported chiefly by the voluntary subscriptions of the benevolent, are established with great advantage to the working classes; and in many market towns and large country parishes, for want of these institutions for their reception, persons of the same rank in life, when suffering from malignant fevers and other contagious diseases, often remain in small dwellings or single chambers, where the healthy and the sick are crowded together, aiding the progress of infection, until the disease spreads itself on every side. Still, the removal of the sick to infirmaries is not unattended with disadvantages; and the strong inclination on the part of their relatives to keep them at home, where they can be watched and attended by those connected with them by family ties, is both natural and commendable. To domestic servants and persons living away from their relations, or having no homes to resort to in sickness, these institutions are of great benefit.

Males and Females in Hospitals.

The Census Returns show only 9,876 persons of both sexes—5,525 males and 4,351 females—in general hospitals for the sick on the night of 30th March 1851. Patients in the military hospitals are not included. More than one-third of the whole number of the patients is returned in the various hospitals in London: where the sick are driven by their wants, or attracted by the extent of accommodation, the high professional standing of the medical officers, and the immediate attention that is given in cases of accident and emergency.

Amongst the occupations furnishing the largest number of patients are the following:—domestic servants, 1,797, of whom 157 are males and 1,640 females; agricultural and other labourers, 1,495; seamen, 197; milliners and seamstresses, 262; charwomen and washerwomen, 166; shoemakers, 173; carpenters, 123.

Occupations of patients. See Summary Tables, LIX. to LXII.

§ 7. CONCLUSION.

The Census was taken on March 31st, 1851; and a statement of the numbers of the people was presented to both Houses of Parliament on 21st June 1851. Our First Report, containing the volumes of revised details and extended abstracts, was presented in 1852. The results of the collateral inquiries into the state of Religion and of Education have appeared with extended Reports; and the present volumes, which contain the results of the further investigations which, in conformity with the provisions of the Act of Parliament, have been instituted into the circumstances of the British population, are the last that we have to lay before your Lordship.

Any inquiry that embraces the whole of the population of Great Britain is necessarily extensive; and if it is as circumstantial as was that of the Census now concluded, it can only be carried out satisfactorily by the aid of a great number of persons.

It is gratifying to us to be able to report to your Lordship that this aid was afforded in every quarter to which application was made. The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs and the Registrar of Merchant Seamen enabled us for the first time to enumerate the Merchant Seamen of the country, at home and abroad. The Board of Admiralty, the Horse Guards, the Board of Ordnance, the Pension Department, and the Paymaster-General, supplied complete returns of the Army and Navy; and the Heads of the Public Offices sent in special returns.*

To the 4,342,226 occupiers of houses or parts of houses, certain duties were allotted; they had to fill up schedules, or to answer circumstantial questions respecting themselves and their families, subject to penalties which the Legislature had imposed for refusal, or for false information. It was not found necessary to enforce the penalty in a single instance. The information was cheerfully furnished, and, on the whole, we believe with a nearer approach to accuracy than has before been attained, here or elsewhere. The working classes often took much trouble to get their schedules filled up, and to facilitate the inquiry. One occupier absolutely refused to supply the enumerator of his district with a schedule properly filled up, or to give the required information respecting his establishment; but he was a magistrate, and upon being privately written to, immediately complied with the provisions of the Act, without the intervention of the Secretary of State.†

* The Post Office has a claim to our acknowledgments on another ground; for its officers carefully distributed amongst the Registrars many tons weight of papers, and brought back all the schedules to the Central Office. It may be here mentioned that to place a schedule of the size of half a sheet of foolscap paper in the hands of every occupier in Great Britain, 24 tons of paper are required, allowing none for waste.

† A few curious cases, of which the following are examples, occurred:—A clergyman refused to return the schedule to the parish clerk, who was the enumerator, and sent it direct to the Central Office, alleging that if he had done otherwise his wife's age would have become a topic of gossip in the beershops of the village. A few eccentric persons, who were inaccessible to everybody, and lived quite alone, were of course objects of some curiosity to their neighbours, who furnished the enumerator with as much information as it was thought fit to seek in such cases. A few occupiers inscribed verses on their schedules; but such instances were rare.

The population, with the assistance of the occupiers, was enumerated by name in schedules on one day (generally) by 38,740 persons, who were specially appointed, instructed, and paid for the purpose.* A reserve supplied the place of those who died or fell ill before the day. These enumerators carried out their instructions satisfactorily, and in no single instance was the population of a district left unenumerated. A few instances were brought under our notice where single houses were missed, which may be partly ascribed to the want in this country of Maps on a large scale.

The Schedules, and the copies of the enumerators, were revised by the Registrars of Births and Deaths in England, and the Parish Officers in Scotland, and in the Islands of the British Seas. These 3,248 officers, who were well acquainted with the people among whom they lived, executed their duties with intelligence and considerable care.

Important assistance was also derived from 782 officers of a higher class, comprising the Superintendent Registrars of England, the Sheriffs, Sheriffs Substitutes, and the Provosts of Royal Burghs in Scotland, as well as the Governors of the Islands in the British Seas.

We cannot bring our labours to a close without recording our sense of the efficient services rendered by the clerks temporarily appointed to this establishment by the Lords of the Treasury, who have generally performed the tasks assigned to them in the various branches of this inquiry with assiduity; nor should we be doing justice to such of the clerks of the General Register Office as were employed in connexion with the Census, more particularly Mr. W. Clode and Mr. G. Wyatt, if we did not express our thanks to them for the valuable assistance which from their previous habits they have been enabled to afford. But our acknowledgments are most especially due to Mr. J. T. Hammack, of the General Register Office, who has fulfilled the expectations which we entertained of him when he was nominated Chief Clerk of the Census Office, —well maintaining the discipline of the large establishment, and in every way rendering most efficient service to us in the execution of this great work.

We have the honour to be,
My Lord,
Your most obedient and faithful Servants,

GEORGE GRAHAM, Registrar General.
WILLIAM FARR, } Assistants to the Registrar General
HORACE MANN, } in the Matter of the Census.

* In 1841 all the local expenses of the Census of England were paid out of the poor-rate; in 1851 the whole of the expenses were voted by Parliament. The cost in England of taking the Census, exclusive of postage and printing, was at the rate of 5*l*. 9*s*. for every 1,000 of the population in 1841; and 5*l*. 4*s*. in 1851, when the inquiry was greatly extended.

EXPLANATION.

The distribution of the occupations of the people is represented by means of colours, shading and symbols.

The pale green tint covers the parts where agricultural and pastoral occupations are followed, while the parts not tinted green but shaded by means of dotting denote the chief manufacturing districts of Great Britain, the most important of which are delineated on an enlarged scale in the Sectional Maps.

The individual branches of manufacture are shown by coloured or shaded spots and symbols: the coloured spots representing mostly textile fabrics, the shaded characters mining and mineral productions, and the symbols various manufactured articles.

Where particular manufactures are carried on extensively, the characters showing the textile and mineral branches are rendered more striking by a thick border, thus W ■ , and the symbols have the word (extra) added.

In England and Wales the characters are repeated for each registration District or Poor Law Union in which the particular manufactures they represent occur to any extent, while in Scotland they are inserted for the counties and the chief towns.

They do not however indicate the precise localities in which the various branches of industry are carried on, except in some instances, as in the case of coalmining where the extent of the coalfields has been duly regarded.

Note.—In consulting this Alphabetical List of Occupations, reference should also be made to the Classified Arrangement shown in the next Table, in which kindred employments are brought together under the Classes and Sub-classes here indicated by numbers in the columns headed "Reference to Classified Arrangement." Occupations closely connected with each other are necessarily separated in an alphabetical arrangement, which should be used with caution by those who wish to arrive at general results.

Persons engaged in more than one occupation have been referred to that which appeared to be their chief or leading pursuit; hence it frequently happens than an understatement is made of the numbers following particular employments. In some cases, where small numbers are returned as engaged in making or selling articles of general consumption, the accuracy of the returns will, perhaps, be questioned; but it should be remembered that a great subdivision of trades is required and supported only in the principal towns, and that the apparent deficiencies in all probability arise from many persons employed in connexion with such articles being merged in other returns.

The numbers returned under trades and manufactures comprise generally all persons employed in them—labourers, apprentices, as well as assistants—thus furnishing a more correct test than any other of the relative importance of each trade. Many young persons are thus referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows who carry on the trades of their deceased husbands, are sometimes returned under employments commonly followed by men. The wives of Innkeepers, Beershop-keepers, Shoemakers, Butchers, Farmers, and Shopkeepers are returned apart from the wives generally, as they are usually engaged in the same businesses as their husbands Superannuated persons, and others described as retired, as well as the inmates of public institutions, are classed under their former occupations, when they are stated.

Upon a final revision of the Classified Arrangement of Occupations, as contained in an extensive and elaborate series of detailed Tables, certain alterations have been made, which are explained in the Note to Table 54, p. cxxviii. The items printed in CAPITALS are those distinguished in the Tables of Counties, Towns, and Districts throughout the publication; the items printed in the ordinary character are those included in such Tables under the head of "Others," in the respective classes and sub-classes.

(a) For returns of the entire army, abroad as well as at home, see p. ccexlv.

Note.—The principles adopted in the present classification of Occupations are detailed in the Report, § 3. When a Class or Sub-class consists of Occupations inapplicable to both sexes, it occurs only in the Table for the sex to which it is appropriate.

Persons engaged in more than one branch of trade are referred to that which appeared to be their chief pursuit. Where inadequate numbers are returned under particular employments, the apparent deficiencies in all probability arise from persons partly engaged in them being returned in other capacities.

The numbers returned under trades and manufactures comprise all persons employed in them, including labourers, apprentices, and assistants, as well as masters. Many young persons are thus referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Women also, chiefly widows who carry on the trades of their deceased husbands, are sometimes returned under employments commonly followed by men. Superannuated persons, and others described as retired, as well as the inmates of public institutions, are classed under their former occupations, when stated.

Upon a final revision of the Classified Arrangement of Occupations, the numbers in this and the preceding Table have been subjected to some alteration, owing to which they will not strictly represent the sum of the details given in the subsequent Tables. Persons not referred to definite occupations are here more numerous than in the detailed Tables, as all the persons there classed as "Others" are not accounted for under the several sub-classes in this Table.

The items printed in CAPITALS are those distinguished in the Tables of Counties, Towns, and Districts throughout the publication; the other items are included in the returns for "Others" under the respective sub-classes in those Tables.

The ages of persons aged 85 and upwards, distinguishing each quinquennial period up to 100, are given, with their Occupations, in a Supplementary Table, p. cl.

(a) Such of the Peers and Members of the House of Commons as are not here returned, are either entered in other capacities, or omitted on account of absence from Great Britain on the day of the Census. For the ages in detail of the Members of both Houses of Parliament, see p. ccclii.

(b) The numbers of officers of the Army and Navy on Half-pay are understated, many of them who omitted to insert "Half-pay" after stating their rank having been classed with Effectives. The items "Officer" and "Half-pay officer" should be taken collectively, both in the case of the Army and Navy. For returns of the entire Army and Navy, distinguishing officers and soldiers, effectives and non-effectives, abroad and at home, see pp. ccexlv—ccexlviii.

(c) As the ministers of the Established Church of Scotland were not in many cases distinguished in the returns from those of the Free Kirk they are here included under the general head of "Presbyterian Minister." Nearly the whole of the 2,725 Presbyterian Ministers were returned in Scotland. According to Oliver and Boyd's Edinburgh Almanack for 1851 the ministers of the Established Kirk of Scotland numbered 1,124.

This Table shows at the age 20 and under 21, that there are 406,491 persons living of that age in Great Britain, of whom 200,633 are Males and 205,858 Females. The numbers living between any two given ages can be obtained by subtracting the numbers against the more advanced age in columns 5, 6, 7 (Q_x.), from the numbers at the earlier age; thus the number against the age 20 (column 5) is 11,606,368, and the number against the age 35 is 6,384,498, which, subtracted from the previous number, gives 5,221,870, as the number of persons living between the ages 20 and 35; and so on for other ages.

TABLE 6.—ENGLAND AND WALES.—ESTIMATED NUMBERS living in ENGLAND and WALES at and above each Year of Age in the Middle of the Year 1851, and the AGGREGATE NUMBER of Years which they have lived. (See Report, § 1.)

	ESTIMATED POPULATION at each Year of Age in the Middle of the Year 1851.			POPULATION at and above the Ages in the First Column.			The Years which the POPULATION in Columns Q_x. (5, 6, 7) have lived over the Age in Column 1.

This Table shows, at the age 20, that there are 346,468 persons living of that age, of whom 171,812 are Males and 174,656 Females. The numbers living between any two given ages can be obtained by subtracting the numbers against the more advanced age in columns 5, 6, 7 (Q_x.), from the numbers at the earlier age; thus, the number against the age of 20 (column 5) is 9,923,070, and the number against the age 35 is 5,469,949, which, subtracted from the previous number, gives 4,453,121, which is the number of persons living between the ages 20 and 35; and so for other ages. The columns 8, 9, 10 (Y_x.), show the number of years the population have lived over any given age; thus, at the age Under 1 Year the number in column 8 shows that the population of England and Wales have lived 477,580,257 years, or 26·4 years each on an average; at age 20, the Table shows that the persons of that age and all higher ages have lived 202,092,059 years, or 20·4 years each on an average. The construction and uses of this Table are fully explained in the Registrar General's Sixth Annual Report, pp. 524–557.

TABLE 7.—ENGLAND AND WALES.—POPULATION, in Quinquennial and Decennial Periods of Age, at the Middle of the Years 1841 and 1851 (as corrected from the graduated Tables), exclusive of the Portion of the ARMY NAVY, and MERCHANT SEAMEN Abroad. (See Report, § 1.)

TABLE 8.—MEAN AGES of the POPULATION of ENGLAND and WALES, as enumerated in 1851, and as they would be if the Annual Number of Births remained stationary. (See Report, § 1.)

AGE.	These numbers express the Ages of the actual Population in 1851.			These numbers express the Ages of the Population.—The births, instead of increasing, remain invariable.

The Table may be read thus:—The AVERAGE AGE of all the Males in England and Wales was 26·0 years in 1851; the average age of Females 26·8 years. The length of life is such in this country, however, that the natural age of the Males is 31·9 years, of Females 32·5 years. The redueed average age of the aetual population arises from the annual increase of births, and the resulting exeess of young over old people living.

The average age of Males who were of the age 20 and upwards was 40·0 years, of Females 40·7. By the Life Table it is shown that 44·2 and 44·8 are the normal ages of the population.

After 60 the two series of results, exhibiting the actual ages and the ealculated ages, nearly agree; and after 80 the ages returned slightly exeeed the ages caleulated (columns 5, 6, 7); whence it may be inferred that the ehief inerease of births has taken place since 1770–90, as the registers show to be the faet.

TABLE 9.—ESTIMATED AGES of the PORTIONS of the ARMY, NAVY, and MERCHANT SEAMEN at Home as well as Abroad in 1821 and 1841, and Abroad only in 1851, who were not included in the ENUMERATED POPULATION. (See Report, § 1.)

The Table may be read thus:—To every 10,000 Males living in Great Britain there were 11 Blind; 6·7 Deaf-and-Dumb; 65·4 Paupers in Workhouses; 22 Prisoners; 8·8 Lunatics in Asylums; and 5·4 Patients in Hospitals.

NOTE

EXPLANATORY OF THE GENERAL ARRANGEMENT OF THE TABLES.

For the convenience of statistical investigation, Great Britain has been divided by the Registrar General into thirteen topographical "Divisions," consisting of groups of counties thought to possess a common distinctive character; and the Islands in the British Seas form a small additional Division by themselves. The arrangement of the Tables in the present publication, as well as in the General Abstract of the Numbers of the Inhabitants already issued, is in accordance with this sub-division of the country.

England and Wales contains eleven of such "Divisions," which (arranged in topographical order) are as follow:

I.—London, comprising the portions of Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent within the limits of the Registrar General's Bills of Mortality.

II.—South-eastern Division, comprising Surrey and Kent (Extra-Metropolitan), Sussex, Hampshire, and Berkshire.

III.—South-Midland Division, comprising Middlesex (Extra-Metropolitan), Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Northamptonshire, Bedfordshire, and Cambridgeshire.

IV.—Eastern Division, comprising Essex, Suffolk, and Norfolk.

V.—South-western Division, comprising Wiltshire, Dorsetshire, Devonshire, Cornwall, and Somersetshire.

VI.—West-Midland Division, comprising Gloucestershire, Herefordshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Worcestershire, and Warwickshire.

VII.—North-Midland Division, comprising Leicestershire, Rutland, Lincolnshire, Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire.

VIII.—North-western Division, comprising Cheshire and Lancashire.

IX.—York Division, consisting of Yorkshire.

X.—Northern Division, comprising Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland.

XI.—Welsh Division, comprising Monmouthshire, South Wales, and North Wales.

The Counties of which the eleven Divisions of England and Wales are composed are not strictly identical with the ancient counties, but are aggregates of entire Registration Districts or Poor Law Unions (which often, under the arrangements of the Poor Law Board, extend into two counties), and in the Tables are called, for the sake of distinction, "Registration Counties." Where a District or Union extends into more than one county, the principle adopted has been to place it with that county in which either the chief town or the greater part of the population is located; hence the Registration Counties differ more or less from the counties proper according to the degree in which the boundaries of the latter have been, for local convenience, disregarded in the formation of the Unions. In the Tables the Registration Counties are arranged topographically under the Divisions, as above.

The "Registration Districts" consist of contiguous parishes or places which are united for purposes connected with the registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, and are generally identical with the Poor Law Unions of the same names. For the parishes and places comprised in each District or Union see the General Abstract of the Census, "I.—Numbers of the Inhabitants." The Districts are arranged in the Tables topographically under Registration Counties, and are numbered continuously from 1 to 623, commencing with the Metropolitan Districts, which form the First Division.

The "Sub-Districts" are sub-divisions of the Districts, and consist of the combined parishes or localities in which resident Registrars are appointed for the registration of Births and Deaths. In order to keep down the bulk of this publication, it has not been deemed advisable to present tabular details for the Sub-Districts beyond the ages of males and females enumerated within their mits.

It was found impossible, without greatly increasing the extent of the Tables, to give more than a selection of the Principal Towns; and it will be observed that the towns have been selected, not alone on the ground of populousness, but in many instances on account of some distinguishing feature which they possess. They are entered in the respective Divisions according to their local position.

Scotland is divided, on the same principle as England, into two Divisions or groups of counties, separated by a line extending from the Frith of Tay south of the Ochil Hills, and along the Forth River, across the head of Loch Lomond, to a line descending southwards by Loch Long to the Frith of Clyde. The counties south of the line are designated "Southern Counties," and include the greater part of the Lowlands of Scotland; the "Northern Counties," north of the line, comprise the Highlands of Scotland and part of the Lowlands. As there is no complete civil sub-division of Scotland between counties and parishes, corresponding with that of Hundreds and Poor Law Unions or Registration Districts in England, the Tables give the results for the counties and the principal towns.

The order of arrangement of the tabular matter, both in the Summary and Detailed Tables, is as follows:

1. Tables of Ages.
2. „ Civil Condition.
3. „ Occupations, with the collateral Tables of Employers, and of Farmers (with Acreage and Men).
4. „ Birth-place.
5. „ Number and Ages of the Blind, Deaf-and-Dumb, Inmates of Workhouses, &c.

In the Summary Tables the results are given collectively for Great Britain, England and Wales, Scotland, and the Islands in the British Seas; then for England and Wales, in Divisions and Registration Counties; then for Scotland, in Counties; and lastly, for each of the Islands in the British Seas. Each subject is completed before the next is entered upon:—For instance, the whole of the facts relating to (1.) Ages are stated before the Tables of (2.) Civil Condition commence.

The Detailed Tables exhibit the results in the several Divisions of England, with the Registration Counties, Districts, and Principal Towns in each; and in the two Divisions of Scotland with their Counties and Towns.

																							3461524 Total of Wives enumerated.

Note.—The Table read vertically shows the number of Wives at each age, with the ages of their Husbands:—Thus, in Great Britain with the Islands in the British Seas, One hundred and nine thousand seven hundred and ninety-five Wives of the age of 20 and under 25 years had Husbands aged 20 and under 25 years; One hundred and eighteen thousand eight hundred and forty-two had Husbands aged 25 and under 30 years.

Read horizontally the Table shows the number of Husbands at each Age, with the ages of their Wives:—Thus, Eight thousand six hundred and ninety-two Husbands aged 35 and under 40 years had Wives aged 20 and under 25 years; Fifty thousand four hundred and forty-four had Wives aged 25 and under 30 years.

At all ages 3,202,974 Husbands and 3,202,974 Wives were enumerated as residing together on the night of March 30th, 1851.

There were also 188,297 Husbands whose Wives were absent (i.e., the Wives were not returned in the same houses as their Husbands), making in all 3,391,271 Husbands enumerated; and 258,550 Wives whose Husbands were absent (i.e., the Husbands were not returned in the same houses as their Wives), making a total of 3,461,524 Wives enumerated in Great Britain and the Islands in the British Seas.

 In the few instances in which persons described as married have been returned at any age under 15, they have been classified in these Tables of Husbands and Wives with the persons aged 15 and under 16 years.

*The Educational Census gives the number of male children belonging to Schools in England and Wales as 1,139,324.

Note.—In the present Tables, the Occupations are arranged according to the principle of classification adopted in the preceding Summary. The Roman Numerals and the other figures in the Column headed "Occupations" indicate the numbers of the several Classes and Sub-classes to which the various branches of labour have been referred. When a Class or Sub-class is inapplicable to both Sexes, it occurs only in the Tables for the sex to which it is appropriate.

The Table is read thus:—In England and Wales there were returned 17,320 Clergymen, of whom 483 were aged 20 and under 25 years, 2,151 aged 25 and under 30 years, 2,474 aged 30 and under 35 years, 2,189 aged 35 and under 40 years, and so on. See Class III. Sub-class 1.

* The "Sons," "Grandsons," "Brothers," and "Nephews," (not otherwise described,) of Farmers and of Graziers, being 15 years of age and upwards, and resident on the farm, &c. are separately returned in Class IX. in connexion with Agriculture, as they are usually engaged in the business of the farm, &c.; those under 15 years are returned as children employ, or as scholars in Class V. All labourers in agriculture (except Shepherds) not living in the farmhouses are returned under the head "Agricultural Labourer (out door);" those living in the house of the farmer are classed under "Farm Servant (in door);" including, among others, Waggoner, Carter, Farmer's Groom, and General Servant.

Note.—Apprentices, assistants, and other persons employed subordinately in trades, are returned with their employers,—an arrangement which will account for many young persons being referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Superannuated persons, and persons described as retired, are classed with their former occupation when it is stated. In the same manner, prisoners, paupers, and other inmates of public institutions, when described according to their ordinary employment, are referred to specific occupations; those not so described are returned in Class XVII.

Note.—Apprentices, assistants, and other persons employed subordinately in trades, are returned with their employers,—an arrangement which will account for many young persons being referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Widows often carry on the businesses of their deceased husbands, and are hence returned under occupations not commonly followed by women. The "Wives" of "Innkeepers," "Beershop-keepers," "Shoemakers," "Shopkeepers," "Butchers," "Farmers," are specifically returned in the Table, as they are generally engaged in the same business as their husbands.

* The Educational Census gives the number of female children belonging to schools in England and Wales as 969,268.

* The class of persons in Scotland known as "Crofters," when returned as occupying a specified extent of land, have been generally classified as "Farmers;" but when the acreage has not been stated, or was very inconsiderable, the Crofters have been referred to "Agricultural Labourer (out-door)." The "Sons," "Grandsons," "Brothers," and "Nephews," (not otherwise described,) of Farmers and of Graziers, being 15 years of age and upwards, and resident on the farm, &c., are separately returned in Class IX. in connexion with Agriculture, as they are usually engaged in the business of the farm, &c.; those under 15 years are returned as children simply, or as scholars, in Class V. All labourers in agriculture (except Shepherds) not living in the farmhouses are returned under the head "Agricultural Labourer (out-door);" those living in the house of the farmer are classed under "Farm Servant (in-door)," including, among others, Waggoner, Carter, Farmer's Groom, and General Servant.

Note.—Apprentices, assistants, and other persons employed subordinately in trades, are returned with their employers,—an arrangement which will account for many young persons being referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Widows often carry on the businesses of their deceased husbands, and are hence returned under occupations not commonly followed by women. The "Wives" of "Innkeepers," "Beershop-keepers," "Shoemakers," "Shopkeepers," "Butchers," "Farmers," are specifically returned in the Table, as they are generally engaged in the same business as their husbands.

* The Educational Census gives the number of female children belonging to schools in Scotland as 163,169.

Note.—Apprentices, assistants, and other persons employed subordinately in trades, are returned with their employers,—an arrangement which will account for many young persons being referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Widows often carry on the businesses of their deceased husbands, and are hence returned under occupations not commonly followed by women. The "Wives" of "Innkeepers," "Beershop-keepers," "Shoemakers," "Shopkeepers," "Butchers," "Farmers," are specifically returned in the Table, as they are generally engaged in the same business as their husbands.

EMPLOYERS (WITH NUMBER OF MEN).

TABLE XXX.—ENGLAND AND WALES.

 This Table includes those persons only, who, in the Householders' Schedules, stated themselves to be Masters, in conformity with the following instruction printed on every Schedule:—"In Trades, the Master is to be distinguished from the Journeyman and Apprentice thus—'Carpenter (Master employing [6] Men)'; inserting always the number of persons in the trade in his employ on March 31st." Many employers of workpeople,—in some trades nearly the whole number,—omitted to attend to this instruction, and were, in consequence, not distinguishable from journeymen. The present return, therefore, although including all who described themselves as masters, is far from complete; but the facts are sufficiently numerous to enable deductions to be drawn as to the number of hands employed by masters in particular trades. For the whole number of persons engaged in special branches of labour, see the Tables of the Occupations of the People.

TABLE XXXI.—SCOTLAND (PRINCIPAL TOWNS).

 The instruction printed on every Householder's Schedule, requiring Masters and Employers of workpeople to describe themselves as such, and to state the number of hands in their employ, was only partly attended to in Scotland, as well as in England. It has been deemed sufficient, therefore, in the imperfect state of the returns, to abstract the information given in respect of such of the employers as attended to the instruction in a few of the principal Towns. The following Table includes all employers who have so returned themselves in Aberdeen, Dundee, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Greenock, Inverness, Leith, Paisley, and Perth. For the whole number of persons engaged in special branches of labour see the Tables of the Occupations of the People.

The Table is read thus:—In nine of the principal Towns in Scotland, out of 622 Tailors who have returned themselves as Masters, 82 employed each one man, 90 employed each two men, 62 employed each three men, &c.; while 182 reported themselves as Masters, but omitted to state the number of men (if any) employed.

TABLE XXXII.—ISLANDS IN THE BRITISH SEAS (PRINCIPAL TOWNS).

 The instruction printed on every Householder's Schedule, requiring Masters and Employers of workpeople to describe themselves as such, and to state the number of hands in their employ, was only partly attended to. It has been deemed sufficient, therefore, in the imperfect state of the returns, to abstract the information given by such of the employers as attended to the instruction in the Towns of the Islands in the British Seas. The following Table includes all employers who have so returned themselves in Douglas, Isle of Man; St. Helier, Jersey; and St. Peter-Port, Guernsey. For the whole number of persons engaged in special branches of labour see the Tables of the Occupations of the People.

Note.—The Table read vertically from the top shows that 6 Labourers were returned as employed on each of 5 farms or holdings under 5 acres, on each of 13 farms or holdings of 5 and under 10 acres, on each of 233 farms of 10 and under 50 acres, on each of 266 farms of 50 and under 75 acres. Read horizontally, the Table shows that of 34,044 Farmers, each occupying 100 acres and under 150 acres, 4,501 made returns as employing 1 man each, 6,931 as employing 2 men each, 5,809 as employing 3 men each, and so on.

* The number of Farmers appearing in this Table will not agree with the number as returned in the Occupation Tables, the difference being caused partly by the omission of all such Farmers as made no return respecting either the acreage of their farms or number of men employed, and partly by the fact that in the Occupation Tables retired Farmers are referred to their former occupation. On the other hand, a certain number of persons who, besides being engaged in farming, carried on some other business, are here included amongst "Farmers," while in the Tables of Occupations they are referred to that other business, when it appeared to be their chief pursuit. The trades and professions carried on by Farmers and other occupiers of land, in addition to the cultivation of the land, will be found in a general Table, page cclxxxv.

Where the area of cultivated land exceeds 2,000 acres, the precise acreage will be found upon reference to the notes under the several Counties, together with the precise number of labourers returned above 59.

The above numbers are exclusive of women and children also returned as Labourers on farms.

Note.—The Table read vertically from the top shows that Six Men were employed on each of 7 farms or holdings of 5 and under 10 acres, on each of 9 farms or holdings of 10 and under 15 acres. Read horizontally, that of 4,910 Farmers occupying 100 and under 150 acres each, 238 made returns as employing each One man, 617 as employing each Two men, and so on; that of the 4,910 Farmers each occupying 100 and under 150 acres of cultivated land, 340 also held various quantities of moor or pasture land, amounting in the aggregate to 220,296 acres.

* The number of Farmers appearing in this Table will not agree with the number stated for Scotland in the Occupation Tables, in consequence of all such Farmers and Crofters as made no return respecting either the extent of land occupied or the number of labourers employed by them being omitted. The omissions of Crofters, and other occupiers of small portions of land, from this cause, are numerous. On the other hand, a considerable number of persons who, besides being engaged in farming, carried on some other business, are here included amongst "Farmers," while in the Tables of Occupations they are referred to that other business, when it appeared to be their chief pursuit.

* Many farmers and occupiers of land, engaged in other pursuits besides farming, returned themselves as in the following examples:—"Farmer and Innkeeper (farming 220 acres, employing 8 labourers);" "Miller, and Farmer of 110 acres (employing 6 labourers and 1 boy);" "Landed Proprietor, farming 613 acres (employing 20 labourers)." In all cases of this nature, except where no information was given either as to the extent of land occupied or the number of labourers employed, the parties were included in the Tables of "Farmers (Acreage and Men)." In the Occupation Tables, however, they were classified in conformity with the principle invariably adopted in the case of persons following more than one occupation; namely, to return them under that which appeared to be their chief or leading pursuit. The returns frequently failed to distinguish the number of labourers engaged on the land from those employed by the same master in his other business: in these instances the labourers in the Table of Farmers will be overstated as applied to the farms.—See further explanation on this point in the Report.—Besides the persons included in the present Table, there were probably many others in trades and professions who occupied land, but omitted to state the fact in their returns.

* Although in some instances the occupations here stated are those actually followed by the Blind at the period of the Census, their former pursuits are, in the majority of cases, referred to. The returns do not admit of the employments in which persons were engaged before loss of sight, being distinguished from those carried on in a state of blindness. In the present Tables the principle of classification adopted in the general Tables of the Occupations of the People is followed, and numbers referring to the Classes and Sub-classes are inserted

* The Occupations followed by persons prior to their becoming In-door Paupers, as here classified, are derived from the statements of the Masters of Workhouses, by whom the returns were in all cases made. In these Tables the various employments are arranged according to the principle of classification adopted in the general Tables of the Occupations of the People, and numbers referring to the Classes and Sub-classes are introduced.

* The Occupations of persons prior to their becoming inmates of Prisons, as here classified, are derived from the statements of the Keepers or Governors of the Prisons, by whom the returns were made. In these Tables the principle of classification adopted in the general Tables of the Occupations of the People is followed, and numbers referring to the Classes and Sub-classes are introduced. The number of Prisoners includes those confined for debt.

* The Occupations of persons prior to their becoming inmates of Lunatic Asylums, as here classified, are derived from the statements of the Proprietors or Keepers of the Asylums, by whom the returns were made. In these Tables the principle of classification adopted in the general Tables of the Occupations of the People is followed, and numbers are inserted referring to the various Classes and Sub-classes.

* Returns were obtained only from the Departments with Boards or head quarters in London: several public offices in Edinburgh, containing a small number of Civil Servants, are therefore omitted. In some instances the returns of the Revenue and other Departments include officers serving in Ireland; but as their precise numbers are not stated, it has been thought better to give the statements as furnished. Functionaries of the Law and Ecclesiastical Courts, and persons employed in the offices connected with them, are not comprised in the Table.

† This number includes officers of the Revenue and Post Office serving in Ireland; viz. in the Customs, 2,341 persons; in the Excise branch of the Inland Revenue, 1,246 persons (Revenue Police Force), besides others whose number is not specified; and in the Dublin Post Office 376 persons. Females acting as Housekeepers and Charwomen were returned by several of the Departments, but they are not here included: 454 are noticed in the Returns.

a Within the limits adopted by the Registrar General for the Weekly Tables of Mortality, comprising 36 Districts, situate in Middlesex, Surrey, and Kent.

* The Districts are the localities adopted for the purpose of Registration of Births, Deaths, and Marriages. Those marked thus * consist of Parishes in which the Poor Law is administered under Local Acts. Each of the other Districts is co-extensive with a Poor Law Union, consisting of one or more Parishes. For the Parishes and Places comprised in each District or Union, see "Population Tables.—I. Numbers of the Inhabitants." The Districts are arranged topographically, and are numbered consecutively from 1 to 623.

† For the Extra-Metropolitan Districts of Middlesex, see Division III.—South-Midland Counties.

* A District in which the Poor Law is administered under a Local Act.

† For the Extra-Metropolitan Districts of Surrey and Kent, see Division II.—South-Eastern Counties.

‡ The Sub-Districts are sub-divisions of the Districts, and consist either of parts of large Parishes or aggregates of small Parishes in which the Births and Deaths are registered by Registrars severally appointed for that purpose. For the Parishes and Places comprised in each Sub-district, see "Population Tables, I.—Numbers of the Inhabitants."

Note.—In the few instances in which persons described as married have been returned at any age under 15, they have been classified with the persons aged 15 and under 20 years.

The Table is read thus:—In Division I.—London, there were unmarried 670,380 males, of whom 374,934 were under 15 years of age,—98,589 aged 15 and under 20 years,—85,590 aged 20 and under 25 years,—and so on; and 735,871 females, of whom 378,645 were under 15 years of age,—111,102 aged 15 and under 20 years,—and so on. There were of married persons, 399,098 Husbands, 474 under 20 years of age,—22,200 aged 20 and under 25 years,—and so on; and 409,731 Wives, 3,465 under 20 years of age,—39,635 aged 20 and under 25 years,—and so on. And there were of widowed persons, 37,080 Widowers, 16 under 20 years of age,—291 aged 20 and under 25 years,—and so on; and 110,076 Widows, 48 under 20 years,—811 aged 20 and under 25 years,—and so on. The difference between the number of Husbands and of Wives arises from married couples being apart, and either the Husband or the Wife having been absent from the Division on the night of March 30th, 1851.

Note.—In the few instances in which persons described as married have been returned at any age under 15, they have been classified in this Table of Husbands and Wives with the persons aged 15 and under 16 years.

The Table read vertically shows the number of Wives at each age, with the ages of their Husbands:—Thus, Sixteen Wives of the Age of 20 and under 25 years had Husbands aged 18; One hundred and five had Husbands aged 19; Thirteen thousand one hundred and six had Husbands aged 20 and under 25 years.

Read horizontally the Table shows the number of Husbands at each Age, with the ages of their Wives:—Thus, Eight Husbands of the Age of 20 and under 25 years had Wives aged 15; Twenty-four had Wives aged 16; One hundred and thirteen had Wives aged 17.

At all ages 370,500 Husbands and 370,500 Wives were enumerated as residing together in the same houses on the night of March 30th, 1851.

There were also 28,598 Husbands whose Wives were absent (i.e., the Wives were not returned in the same houses as their Husbands), making in all 399,098 Husbands enumerated; and 39,231 Wives whose Husbands were absent (i.e., the Husbands were not returned in the same houses as their Wives), making a total of 409,731 Wives enumerated in London.

* Classes V. and XVII. include only those of the Persons described who are not returned in any of the other Classes.

† The return of scholars here given,—derived from the statements of the householders respecting their children,—will, from various causes, generally differ, more or less, from the Returns of the Educational Census. From the latter it appears that there were in Division I.—London, on the day of the Census, 140,962 male children and 113,420 female children belonging to the various schools, besides those "under tuition at home," whose education was superintended by a private tutor or governess. The number of the latter class is 3,290 males and 6,339 females; see next Table.

Note.—In the present Tables the Occupations are arranged according to the principle of classification adopted in the preceding Summary. The Roman Numerals and the other figures in the Column headed "Occupations" indicate the numbers of the several Classes and Sub-classes to which the various branches of labour have been referred. Where a Class or Sub-class is inapplicable to both Sexes it occurs only in the Tables for the sex to which it is appropriate.

The Table is read thus:—In London there were 1,305 Clergymen, of whom 20 were aged 20 and under 25 years, 140 aged 25 and under 30 years, and so on. See Class III. Sub-class I.

* The Educational Census gives the number of male children belonging to Schools in London as 140,962.

* The "Sons," "Grandsons," "Brothers," and "Nephews," (not otherwise described,) of Farmers and of Graziers, being 15 years of age and upwards, and resident on the farm, &c. are separately returned in Class IX. in connexion with Agriculture, as they are usually engaged in the business of the farm, &c.; those under 15 years are returned as children simply, or as scholars, in Class V. All labourers in agriculture (except Shepherds) not living in the farmhouses are returned under the head "Agricultural Labourer (out-door);" those living in the house of the farmer are classed under "Farm Servant (in-door);" including, among others, Waggoner, Carter, Farmer's Groom, and General Servant.

Note.—Apprentices, assistants, and other persons employed subordinately in trades, are returned with their employers,—an arrangement which will account for many young persons being referred to occupations usually followed by adults. Superannuated persons, and persons described as retired, are classed with their former occupation when it is stated. In the same manner, prisoners, paupers, and other inmates of public institutions, when described according to their ordinary employment, are referred to specific occupations; those not so described are returned in Class XVII.
